The Chinese art and costume is especially apparent in creations by Agnes, who also favors the Abyssinian trend, finding inspiration for her triangular and pointed crowns in the Negus coiffure.

The strong influence of the Medici period and coiffure of the Reine Margot are themes which have been developed by Marie Alphonsine.

8 Basic Colors Adopted for Women's Fall Shoes

Eight basic colors for women's shoes have been officially adopted for fall, 1936, by the joint committee of tanners, shoe manufacturers and retailers in cooperation with the Textile Color Card association, it was announced by Margaret Hayden Rorke, managing director of the association. High style shoe and leather colors will be selected later, it was stated.

Five of the colors have been repeated from recent seasons. They are marrona, marine blue, chaudron, Oriental oxblood and Araby green. The three new colors, which have not been named as yet, consist of a ginger type of brown, a russet brown and a dark gray.

Paris Accessory Ideas

Paris is sending over grand accessory ideas, little things that can do so much for a costume. Mainbocher has colored bead flower bouquets trimming the waistline of sheer black woolen frocks, while another house features frogs of supple metal in silver or gilt. Chessmen in metal dangle from the neckline of a smart frock, and Schiaparelli uses gold chains to hold up the trains of evening gowns when dancing.

PATTERN 5297

The old-time well—the bucket hanging there, just waiting to be embroidered in its natural setting. And what a lovely and colorful wall-hanging you'll have when finished! You can use as many bright threads as fancy dictates when you begin to "paint" the old-fashioned garden in lazy-daisy, French knots, running and single stitch. And you needn't frame the panel—just line it, and hang it up.

In pattern 5297 you will find a transfer pattern of a wall hanging 15 by 20 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches needed; directions for finishing wall hanging.

We're Debunked Again: Busy Jocko Doesn't Hunt Vermin

Monkeys have been much maligned. When they go over each other's fur in their cage, occasionally nipping something between their front teeth, they aren't hunting for what you think they're hunting for. So says Dr. H. E. Ewing, entomologist of the United States National museum, in the Journal of Mammalogy, and he backs up his opinion with the agreement of several fellow scientists. Monkeys given the ability to keep clean are highly unlikely to be verminous, the zoologists declare.

But if that isn't what they're after, what are they hunting for? Doctor Ewing made some close observations and a few experiments. In the end it settled down to just hairs. When Jocko finds a loose (or perhaps just a loosening) hair on his mate's back he plucks it out—and nibbles it up.

To keep clean and healthy take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate liver, bowels and stomach.—Adv.

The "Personal Touch" In Taxes

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Newspaper-reading Americans are learning the names of a lot of once-unfamiliar taxes these days.

Capital-stock Tax, Undistributed Corporation Reserve Tax, Tonnage Tax, Manufacturers' Excise Tax, Communications Tax, Insurance Tax—those are just a few of the titles with which a tax-conscious Congress is crowding the headlines.

What do they all mean? Let the experts explain. The important fact is that whatever their titles, whomever they are supposed to hit—we, the people, pay the final bill.

Not directly, of course—but in the natural course of events. As economists explain, the industries and other producers at whom such levies ostensibly are aimed must raise the tax money somehow. How? The obvious method is to add it to the price of their products—of the things which the average worker and his wife and children need and must buy.

That's why we are told there's a hidden tax in every railroad fare we pay, in every market basket we carry, in every rent bill we meet, in every suit we wear, in every 'phone call we make, in every mile we drive.

That's why heavy taxes, wherever aimed, boost the cost of living for every worker and consumer—for the overwhelming majority of American families. That's why, regardless of titles, such taxes retain what writers call the "personal touch."

Trick names for taxes can obscure these facts, but they cannot lower the H. C. L. That must be achieved by reducing waste in government—which makes heavy taxes necessary.

Nothing is surer than death and taxes. A man dies but once, whereas taxes press their claims in divers ways, and several times a year. It is safe to state that most persons think more about tax levies than about their final exit from the affairs of this world. So it happens that the public eye is focused most frequently and intently upon what the government is going to do with regard to collecting the money it needs. The plan to make a heavy inroad upon the undivided surplus of corporations is likely to be modified. Although corporations seem due to receive a hair cut, they will not be shorn baldheaded, it is said. They will be permitted to impound money enough to keep them going and help them over industrial stretches where the sledding is poor. One result of the measure under consideration is that the number of citizens having a taxable income of more than a million dollars will be increased from less than a hundred to almost three hundred. Thus it can be seen that the proposed tax law holds anxiety and peril for us all.

A public speaker drops a few words which, although not new in essence, deserve to be perpetuated as spoken: The men who lead communism in Russia are men willing to share nothing they have with everything you have.

An Ohio city has passed an ordinance making it unlawful for a gasoline station attendant to sell motor fuel to a drunken auto driver. Liquor ordinarily is not sold to an intoxicated person, at least, it is not supposed to be. A drunken man with a replenished gas tank is much more of a menace to the public than a man in the same condition having his system recharged with rum.

The last survivor of the Battle of Fort Stevens, in the District of Columbia, is dead. The present, therefore, may be an appropriate time to recall the fact that in the Civil War the forces of the Confederacy actually arrived within a few miles of the White House, so near that building that President Lincoln was able to view the scrimmage during a short carriage ride.

"The time o'day I do not tell
As some do, by the clock,
Or by the distant chiming bell
Set on some steepled rock,
But by the progress that I see
In what I have to do.
It's either done o'clock for me
Or only half-past through."

What Is The Constitution?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

It has become the fashion in recent weeks for certain public officials to say that the Constitution issue is fading from the current political picture.

They are wrong. No attempt to minimize its importance can alter the fact that the Constitution will remain a dominant issue so long as the American people are determined to resist all efforts to curtail their individual rights and privileges.

But the Constitution is far more than a political issue. It is more than a written code of fundamental law. It is the permanent expression of the American spirit—of the American Way of Life.

There are today—and there will continue to be—men, in public office and out, who don't approve of the American Way of Life. Charmed by modern European experiments, they would like to change our basic system of government by the people, to a form which places all political power in the hands of one or more officials.

The tragic evidences of lost liberties, threatened war and religious intolerance which spring from such dictatorships do not deter them. But the Constitution does. Therefore they would like us to forget about it—and its safeguards—for a while.

But we shouldn't forget. So long as the Constitution lives, our liberties are secure. If it falls, those liberties—and the American Way of Life—fall with it.

Eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty.

Our Army of "Dependents"

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

As millions of Americans struggle with their latest tax forms, they are beginning to realize that there is a large group of "dependents" for whose upkeep they are allowed no exemptions whatever.

It is the growing army of political job-holders—every member of which is dependent for his pay-check on the earnings of the average American citizen and taxpayer.

But the burden doesn't rest on the income taxpayer alone. With other costs of government, it falls on every worker, every housewife, who either earns or spends—if not directly then in taxes hidden somewhere in the price of nearly everything he or she may buy.

And the costs continue to mount.

That's why we hear protests to Congress against taxes on "the American breakfast table and the forgotten man's shirt."

That's why a noted political observer could recently declare that the American people are spending more for government than they are for food, clothing and rent combined.

That's why statisticians can make the startling announcement that the annual total of federal, state and local government expenditures in America averages $517 per family.

Throughout the nation, it is now apparent, the taxpayers themselves are coming to a grim realization of what these things mean to them. And, what is more significant, they are making their protests heard.

It's a good sign—if we don't weaken.

BANK CHARTERING POLICY REVIEWED

State Official Declares Correct Principles in Licensing Banks Are Essential for Sound Banking Conditions

PHILADELPHIA. — Sound public policy in chartering banks was discussed by Carl K. Withers, Commissioner of Banking and Insurance of the State of New Jersey, before the Eastern Conference on Banking Service, held here recently under the auspices of the American Bankers Association. He declared that "few questions bearing on the future stability and security of our banking systems loom as more important than that of a sound policy to be pursued in the chartering of banks."

Alluding to competitive policies of both state and national banking authorities to charter the most banks in the past, he said that "this country was over-banked, and that aside from any other consideration, economic or otherwise, this condition was brought about largely through an unwise, unsafe and unthinking charter policy, alternating between the state and national systems, which has marked and hampered banking progress in this country since its very inception."

Political Influence

He decried political considerations in connection with the chartering of banks, saying: "Political influence has no more place in banking than it has in the deliberations of our highest tribunal—The Supreme Court of the United States. Until this is recognized and brought into being within both our state and national systems, we may never feel safe against the shifting sands of political expedience."

As to the "element of sometimes ridiculous competition heretofore existing between the state and national systems," he said that much may be said in favor of the progress made in recent years. In many states there exists a practical working agreement between local supervising authorities and the federal authorities, whereby all charter applications are mutually considered on a basis of community need rather than competitive advantage as between systems. In some states this arrangement goes even further in the refusal of the one authority to even consider a charter while pending with the other, he declared.

Aside from the competitive and political aspects of our future charter policy, he continued, there are several others more individual and local which merit consideration. Among these he mentioned honesty of purpose, community need, the character of management and adequacy of capital.

Most state laws make reference to the "character, responsibility and fitness" of the incorporators of a new bank, he said, continuing:

"So important do I conceive this factor to be, that I place it first among those for consideration, for unless the motive is sound, honest and sincere, there is little likelihood that the resultant institution in its service to the community will reflect other than the spirit of its founders.

The Lessons of the Past

"Too often in the past have charters been granted to promoters pure and simple—not always pure, and by no means simple. The country was dotted with such. The experience has been costly and, it is to be hoped, the lesson well learned, not only by charter-granting authorities, but the public."

Other factors to be considered as among the most important in granting new bank charters, he said, are the number of institutions already serving the area, the record of earnings of existing institutions, the number of failures since 1920, and the reasons therefor, public convenience and advantage, the reasonable prospects for growth of the community, expectation of profitable operation and whether a branch bank could serve as well.

"Sound public policy demands that no new banks be chartered unless there is a definite, necessitous and permanent need," he declared. "Sound mergers, consolidations and the sensible extension of branch banking are much to be preferred to any general movement toward a flood of new charters. But here again we must guard carefully against monopoly or unbridled branch competition, either of which might become as dangerous as the organization of new banks."

Public Confidence

Challenging a recently published statement that there is an "apparent loss of public confidence in banks," William A. Boyd of Ithaca, N. Y., asks why, if this were true, bank deposits are constantly increasing. "I maintain that any banking institution which has continued to serve its community since the trying days of 1929 must be enjoying the respect and confidence of that community, and I am sure that the very large majority of banking institutions which have come through this depression have never had to 'regain' public confidence," he says.

Trust Institutions

A directory of trust institutions published by the Trust Division, American Bankers Association, lists 2,853 institutions having aggregate capital funds of $4,416,000,000 and total resources of $35,443,000,000. It shows a total of 6,949 men and women engaged in this phase of bank work. The trust institutions comprise 1,356 state-chartered trust companies and banks and 1,497 national banks with trust departments located in 1,694 cities and towns.

TEN-DAY FISHING LICENSE POPULAR

The ten-day fishing license, issued for the first time in 1935, proved popular with tourists and out-of-state residents vacationing in Indiana. This license is designed particularly for non-residents of Indiana who are in the state for a limited time but want to try their luck in the lakes and streams. These licenses are good for ten days from the date of issue and can be obtained from county clerks and authorized agents, at a cost of $1 which represents a saving over the non-resident fishing license issued for the calendar year.

SIXTY FIVE MEN IN SPENCERVILLE PLAY

With a slogan of a "laugh a minute" a cast of 65 well known men of Spencerville and surrounding towns will give the initial performance of "Everybody's Here" this evening at 8:15 o'clock in the Spencerville community hall. The performance will be repeated Friday evening.

"Everybody's Here" which is a follow-up of the popular "Womanless Wedding" presented here a few years ago is said to contain more farcial elements than the former show.

By the magic touch of rouge, lip-stick and powder mere men will be transformed into charming matrons, beautiful girls and vamping flappers.

Elaborate preparations have been made to have the costumes authentic and the men who are appearing in feminine roles will be outfitted in picture hats, evening gowns and high heeled slippers.

"Everybody's Here" is a take-off on a community homecoming, and following the arrival of distinguished men and women and stage and radio stars, several novelty acts are presented. The evening culminates in a riotous Beauty Contest in which five local men appear as the contestants. Do not fail to see the hilarious comedy as it promises to be an outstanding laugh hit of the season.

The doors will be open at 7:00 P. M. and the performance will begin promptly at 8:15 o'clock. The committee in charge advises "come early to be sure of seats." The proceeds are for the benefit of the Community Hall.

File your mortgage exemption befor May 4.

REPUBLICAN ENTHUSIASM AT HOOVER MEETING

A large delegation of Republicans from this community attended the district rally at Fort Wayne Saturday night, which was addressed by Herbert Hoover, former President of the United States. He is the only living ex-president.

He arrived at Fort Wayne shortly after noon and after a number of conferences, he then addressed the young Republican club banquet after which he was escorted to the Gospel Temple, where a packed auditorium awaited him, approximately 5,000 people.

The new deal was compared by Mr. Hoover to a bounding white rabbit which speeds hurriedly in uncertain directions and multiplies its progeny as rapidly. Numerous times during his address, he was interrupted by applause greeting his humorously pungent new deal attacks. The speech was heard by the largest radio audience that has been available for any public speech this year.

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"Fate Rings the Bell"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU know, boys and girls, there's no use denying it, a lot of your adventure stories almost turn a man into a fatalist. A fatalist, as you know, is a person who believes he will live "until his time comes," that is to say, nothing he does can change the "stars" which have already arranged for his particular fate in advance.

I can't believe that theory of life myself. I'm inclined to believe that if you keep running in front of automobiles you are bound—by the law of averages—to get run over, sooner or later. But you can't argue with a dyed-in-the-wool fatalist along those lines. He'll tell you that when you escape it's just not your time and when you get hit it IS your time.

All of which brings us to our story of Frederick Hoyt of Clearfield, Pa. Fred had such a narrow escape under such strange circumstances that about the only way you can explain it is by believing that his time had not come. If you're a fatalist that's the explanation you will like. If you're not a fatalist you will probably put it down to plain every day luck. I'd say it was a combination of both.

Fred's first job—at the age of fourteen—was to sit in a hallway before the door of a certain office. Beyond that door was Fred's first boss—a busy man who hired Fred to keep callers from disturbing him.

Fred Is Buffer for Boss.

Fred was the buffer and he says he turned away at least 99 per cent of the callers. He had a nice comfortable chair beside a big steam radiator and could read or play checkers with himself or do anything he wanted to do providing he didn't let anybody slip by his watchful eye.

There was one restriction, Fred says, upon which his job depended. He couldn't leave his post at any moment of the day. No pretext could excuse his absence for one second. He didn't mind that, he says. He had the only window in the spacious hall, where he sat, and could look out when he got tired reading.

Except for a small telephone table at the other end of the hall, there was no furniture. Fred could put his feet up on the hot radiator when it was cold and make himself at home as much as he wished. Following out his orders to the letter he paid no attention to anything else that might be going on around him.

Ignores Telephone, but It's Agent of Fate.

The telephone, at the far end of the hall, he ignored. No one seemed ever to use the thing anyway, and yet that telephone was destined to be the instrument of Fate—the instrument that would snatch him from a particularly dreadful and untimely end.

Fred had been on the job two months when the fateful day arrived. He had never moved out of that dutiful chair of his. No matter what happened around him, Fred had been true to his trust, and like a faithful watchdog had stayed put before the door of his employer.

Radiator Good Company on Cold Day.

This day was particularly cold and his side partner—the steam radiator—was sizzling hot. The steam hissing through its pipes in front of him was sweet music to his chilly ears. He had a good book and there were few callers so what more could a fellow ask?. As he glanced out of his frosty window, he could see less fortunate persons fighting their way against a wintry blast and he congratulated himself on the sense of duty that had kept him at his post and held his nice warm job for him.

Suddenly an annoying sound grated on Fred's sensitive ears. It was that blame telephone at the other end of the hall. He let it ring. He should worry. He wasn't going to get up and answer it and then have some salesman slip in and annoy the boss. No air-ree. He smiled, cocked his feet higher on the radiator, and went on reading.

Ringing Telephone Annoys Fred.

But that doggoned phone kept on ringing. It wouldn't stop. You'd think when a fellow didn't answer they'd stop ringing. But they didn't.

"Ding-a ling-a ling," went the telephone!

"Bang!" went Fred's warm feet off the sizzling radiator and he made for the other end of the hall. He figured he could answer the darn thing and be back before anyone noticed his absence. He made the hall in 10 jumps and grabbed the receiver. And as he did, Fred says, the bottom fell out of the world!

The Bottom Falls Out of the World.

Wham! A rush of air slammed him violently against the wall! Boom! A detonation like thunder shook the building under his feet! He fell, like a log, to the floor!

Cries came from the front office—cries and dense clouds of live steam! Windows crashed open! The agonized voice of his boss came to him crying his name.

Suddenly the air cleared. Fred's boss appeared and hugged him joyously. Fred was amazed. Here he was getting hugged instead of getting fired! He looked around and his eyes nearly popped out of his head.

The Radiator Had Been Blown to Pieces.

His easy chair was a mass of wreckage! The radiator was gone! Blown to bits! It had exploded and jagged fragments of iron protruded from the place on the wall WHERE FRED'S HEAD HAD BEEN FOR THE LAST TWO MONTHS! If that phone hadn't rung the boy would have been blown to pieces!

Well, I'm not advising disobedience by any means, but, by golly, disobedience saved Fred's life that day. Or was it just "not his time?"

Feminine Hands Guided Ireland Long, Long Ago

The queens of ancient Ireland and especially of Ulster figure prominently in the history and folklore of the land. "This fact is one of the reasons why Ireland is always represented as a beautiful woman," states a writer in the New York World-Telegram, who tells how one need only enter the ports of Belfast, Londonderry or Dublin to feel the shadowy presence of these queenly Cinderellas of the past. "There is hardly a district but what an ancient castle, some relic, or local songs or folklore do not contain reference to a fairy queen of Ireland. History records that through feminine rivalry, queendoms vied with one another in primitive arts."

When the Milesians, or Gaels, first landed in Ireland they were ruled by a queen named Scota, and they found here a people called the Danaans. And the Danaans were ruled by three kings, who were not only brothers, but married to three sisters. The names of these three sister queens were Eire, Banba and Fiola and their three names are often taken to signify Ireland. In fact, Ireland is said to derive its name from the first sister, Eire.

In far distant times, the queens of Ireland wore clothes of seven different colors and none but royalty might wear clothes of the same colors. A wise counsellor of the queen wore a dress of six colors, a nobleman of the court was garmented in five colors, and so on, according to rank down to one color. It is from these queenly colors that early Irish peasants took their costume colors of dress.

At Belfast, one sees evidence of the reign of the great Irish Empress Macha, "Queen of the Golden Hair." While the capital of northern Ireland is only three centuries old, Queen Macha was born in Ulster and ruled all Ireland for seven years.

The Garibaldi

Many ladies must remember wearing, in the 70's of last century, an article of dress known as a "garibaldi," writes George Eyre-Tood in the Glasgow Herald. As a mere man can remember it, this was a sort of shirt blouse, buttoned down the front, and ending with a belt at the waist. It was not a garment merely named after the famous Italian guerilla chief, but was a reproduction of the garment actually worn by him, as shown in his portraits. The vogue of the wearing of the garibaldi was a result of the furore of enthusiasm for the Italian patriot which swept over Scotland when he paid it a visit in 1863. Following a wildly romantic career as sailor, filibuster, drover, shipbroker, teacher of mathematics and naval commander, he had freed Sicily from the tyranny of the Bourbons.

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name

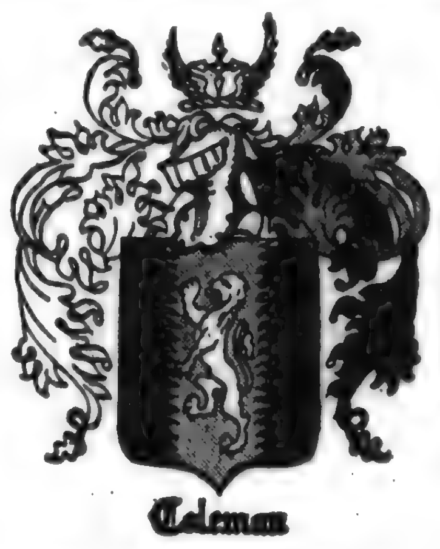
By
RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

A Coleman?

THIS name is found in England as early as A. D. 664, on the northeast coast. The first-mentioned bearer of the name was a celebrated Scotch Bishop of Lindisfarne. This Bishop, in consequence of a heated controversy, retired from his church and built three monasteries in different parts of the country. Another devout member of the family was a crusader to the Holy Land and was slain in Austria. He became a patron saint of that country in 1015, and the eighteenth of October is still noted on the Roman calendar as the Memorial day of the martyr.

It is interesting to know that there is an important street in the city of London which has borne the name of Coleman since time immemorial.

One of the first of the Coleman family to come to America was Thomas, who spelled the name "Coultman." He was born in 1602 in Wiltshire, England. He came over on the good ship James, arriving in Boston, Mass., 1635. He was married three times and left a long line of descendants. His first wife was Mary (surname unknown); his second wife was Mary Johnson, and the third was Mary Rowell. His three brothers Edward, Samuel and William, were also early arrivals in this country.



Coleman

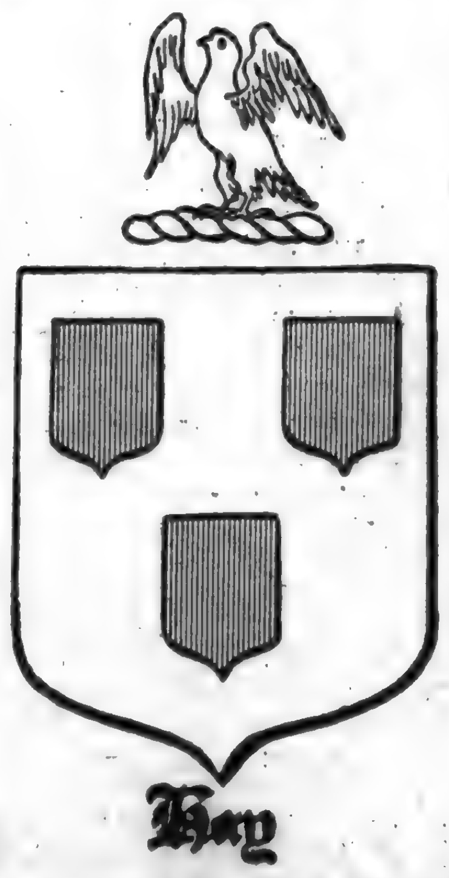
Other Colemans came at later times. Joseph came from County Kent, England, and settled in Scituate, Mass., in 1635. William Coleman and his wife Elizabeth, came on the ship Arabella in 1671. Their son, Benjamin, became a noted minister and was a director of Harvard uiversity for 50 years.

The coat of arms above shown is ascribed to William Coleman (1673), of Massachusetts.

A Hay?

THE legend surrounding the origin of this name is that, during the reign of Kenneth III of Scotland about the year 980, the Danes, having invaded the country, were met by the monarch near Loncarty, in Perthshire. At first the Scots gave way and fled through a narrow pass, where they were stopped by a countryman of great strength and courage, with his two sons and no weapons other than the yokes of their plows. Severely reprimanding the fugitives for their cowardice, he succeeded in rallying them. The battle was renewed and the Danes put to flight. After the victory was won, the old man lying on the ground, wounded, cried out, "Hay! Hay!" and this word became the name of his posterity.

The king, as a reward to Hay, gave him as much land in the district of Gowrie as a falcon could fly over before it settled. The falcon flew over six miles in length and lighted on a stone which was called Falconstone.



Hay

The motto of the family is "Serva jugum," meaning "keep the yoke." The crest of the arms above shown represents the falcon rising for flight. This coat of arms was also granted to the rustic Scot by King Kenneth. The land over which the falcon flew was later called Errol and was the home of the Hays, Earls of Errol, for generations.

Hays in America settled in Massachusetts and Connecticut. Hays of East Chester, N. Y., claim descent from James Hay of Scotland, one of the followers of the Pretender, who escaped to this country in 1745.

Armies Like Stuffed Effigy of a Prehistoric Monster

The armies of 1914 had more than two months of grace before they lapsed into the stagnation of trench warfare. Nowadays the proportion of machine guns and other automatic firearms has increased enormously.

It is thus a safe deduction and prediction that the armies of today would sink into trenches within a week—if they ever got to grips—for there is more than a possibility that these infantry bodies would be dispersed by air attack or hamstrung by the bombing of their transport while they were still groping forward.

The more one reflects upon the present type of armies, which is still the prewar type, with a few additions, the more do they appear like the stuffed museum effigy of some prehistoric monster—harmless if horrifying.—B. H. Liddell Hart in Current History.

Cleveland Swapped Fancy Dinner for Corned Beef

During his bachelor days at the White House, President Cleveland once sat down to an elaborate dinner—served by the faithful William Sinclair—when a familiar odor came in through the window.

"William, what is that smell?" asked Cleveland.

"I am very sorry, sir, but that is the smell of the servants' dinner,' replied William.

"What is it—corned beef and cabbage?"

William confirmed the suspicion and the President said:

"Well, William, take this dinner down to the servants and bring their dinner to me."

"And," said Cleveland later—the story is in Denis Tilden Lynch's biography of Cleveland—"I had the best dinner I had had for months."—Kansas City Star.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Buckie's Bad Break

COWBOYS who rode the Montana range knew him only as Buckie. That nickname is explained by the fact that he was just about the best rider that ever forked a bronc. Plenty of the wild ones had tried to pile him but he just remarked sadly "Bad horsey, shouldn't go bucky-bucky!" and stayed right in the saddle. But even the best of riders is likely to hit the dirt when his horse steps in a prairie dog hole while going at full speed.

That's what happened to Buckie one day when he was out riding the range alone. His horse's neck was broken so the animal didn't move after it fell. Nor did Buckie move—much. Just his leg was broken and it was pinned under the dead weight of the horse. Whenever he tried to wriggle it free, a sickening pain almost made him faint. Of course, he shouted for help. But there was no one within 127 miles so his shouts weren't heard.

Night came and with it a chill wind that cut to the bone. Not far away a wolf howled and a moment later it was answered by another and another and another. Buckie knew what that meant. He decided it was time to do something. But what? Let Buckie himself answer:

"What did I do? Why, I finally had to walk eight miles to find a pole thick enough and strong enough to pry that darned hoss off my leg."

The Duel That Failed

O. S. CLARK of Attica, Ind., went to the Texas Panhandle when it was wild and woolly. There he met Clay Allison, a famous gun-fighter who told him about the strangest duel he'd ever seen. It was between two frontiersmen who didn't like the color of each other's hair. So they agreed to fight it out with long rifles—stand back to back, then each take ten long steps, turn and begin firing.

The duel began. Each with his right eye drew a bead on the other's left eye—it wasn't sportsmanlike to shoot out the other man's right eye and thus spoil his aim. They fired at the same instant but neither bullet took effect.

They shot a second time—a third—a fourth—and a fifth. Still nothing happened. In fact they kept shooting until each man had used up 20 cartridges. "There's something spooky about this," said one. "Shore is!" said the other. "Maybe we ain't supposed to kill each other."

"Reckon we'd better call it off and shake hands," suggested the first. "Suits me!" said the second.

They started toward each other, each one taking ten long steps so they would meet face to face where they had parted back to back. As they met and clasped hands, one exclaimed "Ouch! Something's burnin' through my boot!"

They looked down. There on the ground was a pile of melted lead. The mystery of the bullets that failed to kill was solved. So accurate had been their aim that their bullets had met midway with such terrific force that they melted each other and dropped to the ground. Clay said he knew this was true because he saw the place on the ground where the melted lead had been and there wasn't a speck of grass growing there.

Truthful Election Costs

AN OHIO law requires candidates for office to file a report of all expenditures in their campaigns. Sometimes these reports are very sketchy and not always truthful.

But the man who ran for sheriff of Perry county a few years ago turned in a report that no one could doubt. It said:

"Lost 1,349 hours of sleep thinking about the election. Lost two front teeth and a lot of hair in a personal encounter with an opponent. Donated one beef, four shoats and five sheep to county barbecues. Gave away two pairs of suspenders, four calico dresses, $5 in cash and 15 baby rattles.

"Kissed 126 babies. Put up four stoves. Kindled 14 fires. Walked 4,076 miles. Shook hands with 9,508 people. Told 10,101 lies and talked enough to make in print 1,021 volumes.

"Attended 16 revivals and was baptized four times by immersion and twice by other ways. Contributed $50 to foreign missions and made love to nine widows—five grass and four sod.

"Hugged 40 old maids. Got dog-bit 39 times. Lost the election by 353 votes."

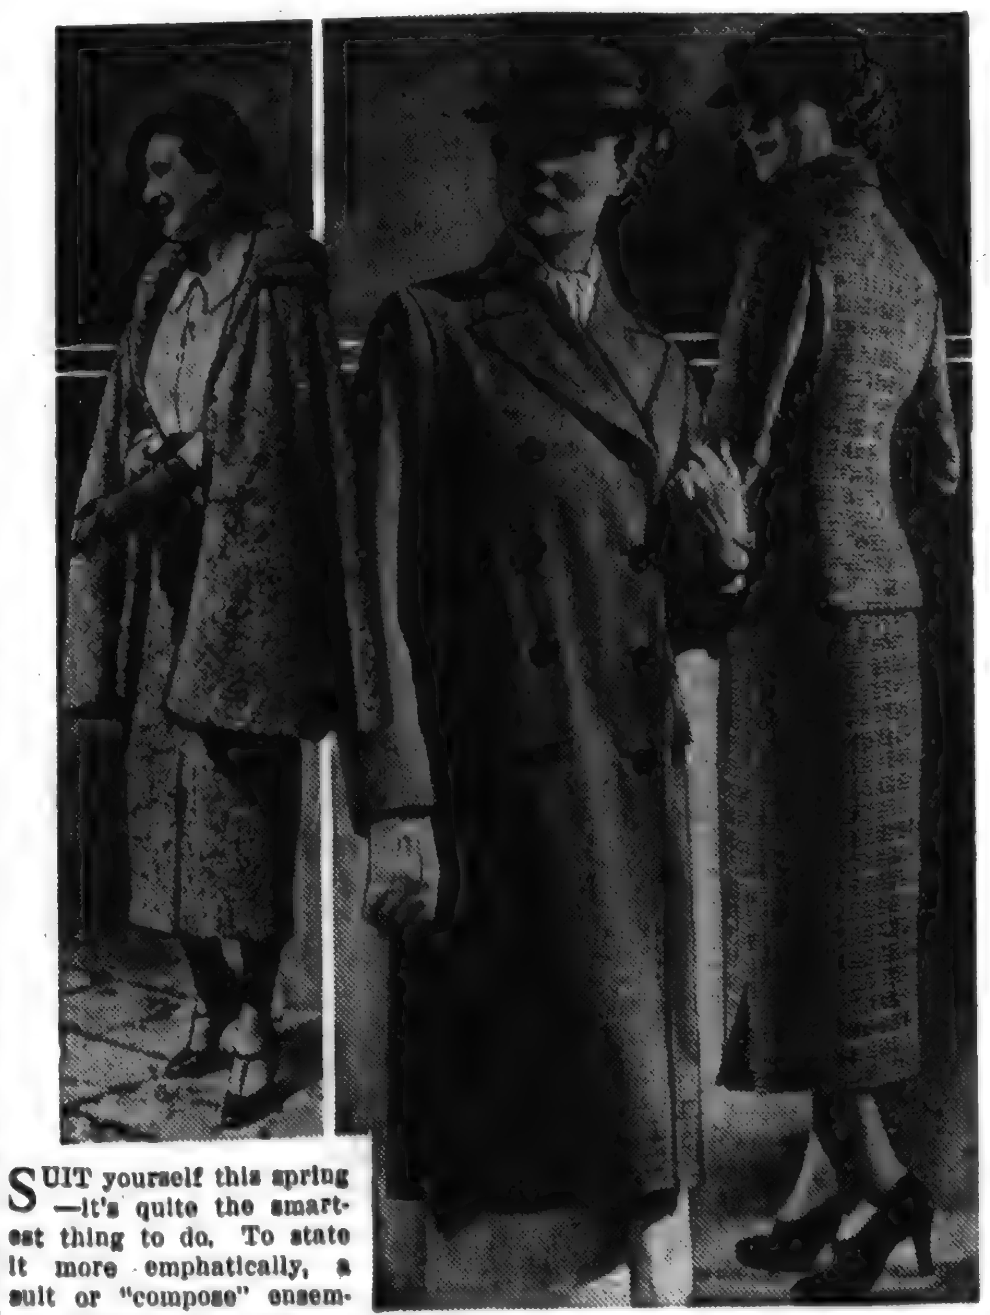
Great Navigator, Explorer

Abel Janssoon Tasman, died 1659, at fifty-six, having achieved a reputation as the greatest of Dutch navigators and one of the greatest explorers. But he made some big mistakes. He couldn't find a continent. Sent out in 1642 to explore Australia, he sailed completely around it and never sighted it once! Later, as the significance of his error was realized, geographers knew for the first time that Australia was not a part of the Antarctic continent. No man did more in charting the Pacific's shores and islands. He carried on commerce with Japan for the Dutch more than two centuries before the voyage of Commodore Matthew Perry, who often is credited with opening Japan's ports to other nations.

Fabric Accent on Pretty Woolens

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



SUIT yourself this spring—it's quite the smartest thing to do. To state it more emphatically, a suit or "compose" ensemble tailored of handsome woolen weave is a fashion "must" this spring. You are not the type to wear a suit? Before you jump at conclusions see the endless variety of suits in the spring style parade. There is no question as to finding an affinity suit this season.

There's a whole family-tree of suits in the fashion picture, related as far as the perfectly stunning woolens that fashion them, yet entirely different in the final analysis of color moods, silhouette and general style. If you are too heavy at the waistline to wear one of the trim little man-tailored short-jacket suits, there is a consolation prize awaiting you in the picturesque cape-and-skirt models tailored of some one or other of the gorgeous tropical woolens that make color glory and novel weave their theme. Such a costume is pictured to the left in the illustration. This is a Bruyere ensemble of a nubby gray and green mixed summer tweed. This type is a decided favorite with smart Parisiennes.

The classic tailleur developed in men's wear suitings is an outstanding fashion, with definite preference for the single breasted type with its flattering sweep of long lapels. Both hard and soft finished worsteds are used in these suits, with sharkskins, herringbone weaves, distinct checks, cheviots, serge types, monotone and chalk stripe flannels and wool gabardine all important.

Men's checked worsted is the practical fabric for the good looking spring suit to the right in the picture. It has a classic singlebreasted three-button jacket with traditional flap pockets and a slim straight skirt. The back panel of the jacket and the skirt are correspondingly slashed at the sides.

The new mixed or compose ensembles are appearing with coats in contrasting color and fabric. The "baby reefer" of fingertip length with double-breasted closing and man-tailored styling of lapels and pockets is frequently seen in covert cloth, or in wool gabardine, in beige, tan, navy or gray worn over tailored suits or with the one-piece dress of contrasting woolen. A reefer coat of the sort described centers the group shown. It is tailored of a very fine wool gabardine. Note especially its new length. The latest "baby" swagger coats also adopt this new length, also a hiplength.

The newest tweeds (in the lead for travel and country wear) are in rich deep colorings accented with flecks and nubs of contrasting shades. There are also many soft lovely tweeds in natural and pastel colors with over-patternings in bright color. Casual assemblings are smart in informal suits, the skirts frequently being in monotone or flecked tweeds and the jackets in gun club patternings, hound's tooth or shepherd checks or conservative glen plaids.

A leading fashion is the adaptation of the masculine morning suit with striped skirt and oxford gray jacket in men's wear worsted, frequently bound with braid. Another favorite in this class is developed in men's wear flannel with pearl gray skirt and steel gray jacket with revers of the lighter skirt fabric.

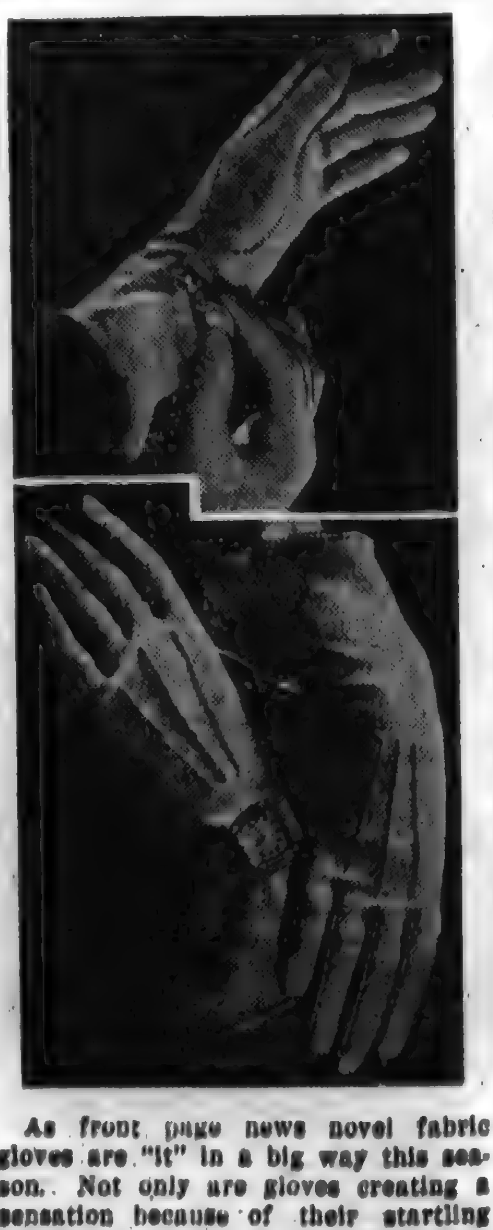
TRICKY GLOVES

By CHERIE NICHOLAS



As front page news novel fabric gloves are "it" in a big way this season. Not only are gloves creating a sensation because of their startling colors but they are given to tricks that are as practical as they are intriguing. A really wonderful idea is the glove with a zipper pocket in the left wrist to hold your small change. See it in action as pictured above. Another cute idea is the glove with an unbreakable crystal inset on left wrist (see picture) so that your wrist watch is visible without turning back the cuff. This year there is an endless variety of beautiful mesh glove fabrics of bemberg brought out.

Knife-Pleated Sleeves

Some of the new sleeves now shown are knife-pleated.

SPRING HATS REVEL IN TOASTED TONES

In addition to black and plenty of navy blue—especially a dark purplish shade—the prominent colors in hats for spring and early summer are toasted tones, blond tortoise shell, burnt straw, natural beige, fawn, tomato red and soft tints of washed blue, as well as tones of grayish blues on the slate side.

Bright red is used a great deal in combination with black, with navy blue and with white. The greens are represented by soft tones of reseda.

Pastel tones in general are foreseen for spring and summer, and among them is a soft shade of pale faded pink that is sponsored by all the leading milliners. This color is called old pink by certain houses and ashes of roses by other designers.

Sequin Embroideries Far From Being Exhausted

The vogue of sequin embroideries is far from being exhausted.

Such houses as Maggy Rouff and Chanel use sequins in wide designs on sheer rayon crepe grounds or on chiffon or lace dresses. Ardanse embroiders with sequins in plastic material the two ends of a long scarf or panel in the same fabric as the evening dress, and fastens this scarf to the wrist where the embroidery gives a bracelet effect. Lelong obtains changeable effects on chiffon dresses by disposing sequins in degrade tones.

Spanish Shawl Scarfs

Spanish shawl scarfs are being shown with some of the new spring hats. They are made of knitted black silk edged with fringe and are worn knotted loosely about the neck like a fichu.

Shoe Colors

Newest shades for women's footwear in London include wine rose, burgundy, berry bloom, cassowary and raspberry.

For a Change

You can vary a simple shirtwaist frock of white or pastel silk by a change of color every day or so in silk necktie and scarf sash to match.

NEW KITCHEN STOVE MAKES ITS OWN GAS

Housewives Marvel at Coleman Range That Lights Instantly Like City Gas—Cooks a Meal with 2c Worth of Fuel

A new kitchen range that offers every cooking convenience of the finest city gas range is now available to housewives, wherever they live.

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, brings to a lifetime of inventive genius his crowning achievement in this amazing new Coleman Safety Range. This new stove makes its own gas from ordinary, lead-free gasoline. A patented method of carburization converts liquid fuel into gas, much the same as in present day automobile engines.

W. C. COLEMAN

The Coleman Range lights instantly, like city gas. Its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners, another of Mr. Coleman's outstanding developments, produce a clean, clear-blue flame, so hot that a low flame does all ordinary cooking. Tests show an average family meal for five takes about 2c worth of fuel.

Coleman Ranges are finished in gleaming porcelain enamel. Their pleasing colors combine outstanding beauty with unequalled performance.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful new Coleman Ranges will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by simply addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-236, Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

Italy has prepared a decree making training in aviation compulsory for all young men whose brains and bodies fit them for the task. This should not be passed over casually as a mere war measure. The time will come when operating a flying machine will mean no more than driving an auto. Millions now living can remember the time when the owner of a new flivver brought the blush of shame to the cheeks of his neighbors by inquiring haughtily: "Do you drive a car?"

Mr. Hitler has been upheld in another election, about 98 per cent of the votes cast being in his favor. The tickets contained no space in which to record disapproval and blank ballots were thrown out. The referendum indicates, nevertheless, that Germany is satisfied with her leader: but the method of voting reminds one just a little of the cry of the man who used to follow the county fairs: "Walk up, ladies and gents. No blanks on the board."

ANNUAL SEAL SALE DECIDED SUCCESS

The annual sale of Christmas Seals in DeKalb County was in every way a success and the officers of the DeKalb County Tuberculosis Association wish to thank every one who in any way helped to make it a success, the workers who helped put on the drive and all who purchased Health Bonds or Christmas Seals.

Seventy seven cents of each dollar is used in DeKalb County in the fight against tuberculosis, 33 cents is sent to the State Tuberculosis Association who in turn send 5 cents of that to the National Association.

DeKalb County is just one small unit with several hundred others in Indiana all making the fight against tuberculosis, and with out the splendid cooperation of the many citizens who have helped this work could not be carried on.

$912.27 was raised throughout the county and most cities and townships increased their contributions. Following is the amounts raised by the different cities and townships:

Auburn	$430.89
Garrett	181.60

WITH OUR CLUB LADIES

CULTURE CLUB HOLDS LAST MEETING

The Culture Club selected their last meeting of the year with a six o'clock dinner at the home of Mrs. Margaret Wisler, with Mrs. Clarabelle Hart assisting the hostess. A three course dinner was served on tables decorated in the Easter spirit. The home was also decorated in the Easter lenten spirit. After the dinner the annual election of officers took place. The officers of the coming season were Mrs. Winifred Hart, president; Mrs. Anne Sechler, vice president; Mrs. Virgilia Kinsey, secretary; Mrs. Gladys Shull, assistant secretary; Mrs. Alice Reidenbach, treasurer, Mrs. Blanch Leighty, critic; Mrs. Troas Carpenter, assistant critic; Mrs. Margaret Wisler, press correnpondent.

Following the election of officers a social hour, comprised of games, contests, and April Fool pranks, were enjoyed. The club offered a vote of thanks to Mrs. Wisler and Mrs. Hart for the last successful party of the year. The club expects a big year next year because of their new unique system of cultural study that will be taken up next fall.

ENJOY DINNER SERIES

The Ladies' Literary Club has competed a series of dinner programs which have proved interesting and worth while to everyone concerned.

March 25 one-half of the members entertained the other half at a pay dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Staman, northeast of St. Joe. Miss Violet May was chairman for the evening. Following the attractively appointed two-course dinner, Mrs. Cora Curie, president, took charge of the program.

Mrs. John Leighty presented a paper on Conservation that showed much thinking and was greatly appreciated. Mrs. Belle Woodcox conducted some very interesting work on potry, ending by having everyone compose a little verse. Mrs. Grace Dilley then gave a delightful review of "A Lantern In Her Hand," by Bess Streeter Aldrich.

Last Wednesday night, April 1, another committee headed by Mrs. Thelma Baker presented a dinner at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Cole. Aferwards the evening was devoted to Nature, and the study of birds to be given by Mrs. Jennie Sechler, member emeritus, was presented by her daughter, Mrs. Flossie Mavis, formerly of St. Joe. Mrs. Lillian Buckingham read a clever parody on flowers, followed by an interesting round table discussion of trees. A parliamentary drill was conducted by Mrs. Belle Woodcox assisted by the club. Mrs. Grace Dilley took charge of some amusing games. A quartette, composed of Mesdames John Leighty, Fred Leighty, Glen Cole, and William Staman, then sang "My Little Gypsy Sweetheart" with Mrs. Frank Curie at the piano.

These meetings have added greatly to the bond of club ties. The last few meetings have been well attended, and very full work has been included in order to make up that missed during the extreme winter weather. The few dollars made by the dinners will probably be used toward joining the state and national Federation of Women's Clubs. All friends will congratulate the L. L. C. on this new step.

ENTERTAINS SORORITY

Miss Janalyce Rouls entertained her Fort Wayne alumnus chapter the Mu Zeta sorority April 2 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Glen Cole.

During the evening the guests played a progressive game at three card tables. Scores were kept on yellow tallies in the shape of spring hat boxes.

At the close of the evening the hostess led the way to the dining room where the guests were seated together at one long table of Easter appointments with yellow predominating. A center-piece of daisies was arranged between tall tapers. A nest of gaily colored eggs was placed at each end of the table and guarded by large felt bunnies. Place cards were attached to tiny potted forget-me nots. A two-course supper was served.

Guests for the evening included the Mesdames Erna Shriner, Ruth Shimp, Edith Robertson, and the Misses Marian Ringle, Olive Perkins, Mabel Greenwalt, and Ruth Haver, all of Fort Wayne, Miss Mildred Miller, of Monroeville, and Miss Hazel Storer, of St. Joe.

He gave some good sound philosophy in his talk to farm folk and in his impersonations and make-up he is excellent. Franklin and Troy townships gave the play and local young people took their usual part in furnishing musical numbers. A rather unique report of the S. & E. convention was given by the delegates in the form of a playlet.

LIFE IS TOO SHORT
DAIRY COWS—The average cow drinks 25 gallons of water a day. Supplied with running water at the barn, they will produce 5 to 10% more milk.
HORSES should have 10 to 20 gallons each a day.
CHICKENS—100 chickens need 2½ gallons a day.
HOGS need plenty of water to make flesh and require about 2 gallons of water each a day.
... to be pumping all day long. Get running water Electrically

A CONSTANT access to a plentiful supply of good running water is essential for all livestock. Pumping and carrying water by hand is not only inadequate; it is also expensive—in loss of profits.

Dairy cows, for instance, will produce from 5 to 10 per cent more milk without increasing the feeding rations if they are supplied with drinking cups at the stalls.

Horses and mules do better work when plentifully supplied with water. As an egg is two-thirds water, it is easy to see how important running water is to chickens.

Get running water—ELECTRICALLY.

THE $12,000,000,000 TAX ITEM

What is the largest item in the American budget?

Is it food, rent, clothing, or light and power? If you guess any of these, you're entirely wrong.

The largest item is taxes!

Our annual tax load—federal, state and local—is now in the neighborhood of $12,000,000,000. By contrast, the annual food bill is $11,500,000,000—the annual rent bill, $10,000,000,000—the annual clothing bill, $6,000,000,000—the annual light and power bill, $2,000,000,000.

Government, in other words, takes, directly and indirectly, more of our income than is taken by the grocer and butcher—more than is taken by the landlord—twice as much as we pay the clothing store—and six times as much as we pay the electric and gas company!

But, you say, "I'm a man of average means. I pay little of this tax load—big business carries the principal burden."

If you think that, reflect on these figures: If the entire net income of all the corporations in this country in 1933—last year for which official figures are available—had been confiscated for tax purposes, it would have paid just about one-quarter of the total bill, leaving three-quarters to be made up from other sources!

The facts speak for themselves. Taxation is the greatest problem the people face—and it is constantly becoming graver.

MY NEW FORD V-8 IS Easy to Steer

YOU'LL notice how easily the New Ford steers the first time you drive it . . . particularly when you take sharp curves or park in a short curb-space. A new 17-to-1 steering gear ratio, and other refinements make this the easiest handling Ford car ever built.

For years the finest cars have been distinguished by a V-type engine. The Ford Motor Company completed one of its greatest achievements when it introduced this type of engine to the low-price field. But progress did not stop here. Every feature of the New Ford for 1936 was made to measure up to the quality of the V-8 engine—driving ease included.

APRIL

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1936 NUMBER 16

EVERYBODY WAS THERE

The rollicking comedy, "Everybody's Here," given by a male cast of sixty-five local men at the Spencerville Community Hall last Thursday and Friday nights, scored a tremendous hit. It showed to a capacity audience both times and according to official estimation approximately eight hundred persons saw the performance, some driving as many as fifty miles to see the play.

Everybody's Here" is an old fashioned home coming sponsored by a local Woman's Club, suffragette league, may-or, and the usual committees, attended by many notables from Joe Penner, played by Billy Steward, to President and Mrs. Roosevelt, played by Ed Pflaumer and Floid Dean. After the assembling of the Oldbrooks, the Rev. and his wife, the Whooples, the Cohens, the senator and his wife, Hiram and Evelina Komikal and their ten kids, and the president and his wife, the meeting is begun under the direction of the mayor, played by F. E. Rhodes.

After a very brief address, Lowell Thomas, Everett Paschen, arrives with Kate Smith, Ethel Merman, Joe Penner, and the glamorous 'Come up and see me some time' Mae West, who lost no time in playing up to the most eligible men in the audience as only Beeks Erick could. Commendable mention should be made of DuWayne Kinsey, as the alluring Ethel Merman, singing, "All I Do is Dream of You," and Joe Newhouser as Kate Smith in singing, "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain" though try as hard as they might the Komikal Kids were never able to find that moon, much to the disappointment of Toodles, Dr. Baumgartner.

There followed a dance by the Gay 90's and a snapper, up to date one by the Girls of 1936, who had discarded the bustles, skirts, and gloves, for striking beach pajamas of the slacks and halter type.

A bit of the plaintive Southern melody was introduced by Roy Reidenbach as Uncle Joe singing "Old Black Joe" and in contrast was Jimmie Butler as Sadie singin' and dancin' "Dark Town Strutter's Ball." Quite laughter provoking were the trained bear act and the fight at which the victor, Bill Miller as Knockout Nelson in a bathing suit topped by a hugh fur coat rode triumphantly to the stage on a child's tricycle. The entertainment was climaxed with the Beauty Contest won so "bodaciously" by Roy Keller as Miss Cheesetown, garbed in a costume of riotous color and a big floppy hat.

No character was more disguised than Merwin Place, who certainly could not have recognized himself in his character of little Tessie thoroughly enjoying the evening with her companion Jimmie (Walter Baker) who had the usual balloons, marbles, and what nots stuffed in his pockets and produced at the right time to cause speakers much torment. The Komical family, the Cohens, and the janitors provoked constant merriment, much beneath the dignity of the snobbish president of the Woman's Club so ably played by O. E. Ginther.

Costumes for the play were gorgeous and many quite ridiculous. The acts were all humorous, especially the one given by Jake, played by Dedwood Ridgway, who appeared at the home coming with his sister, Lucindy, Roy Koch. Additional music was provided by the Rythm Ramblers, Mrs. LaVern Angel, Fred Steward, Billy Erick, Billy Allen, Loren Dale Laub and Max Hafner. Pauline Baumgartner accompanied the play. At no time did the entertainment lag and the audience went home not bored but unquestionably tired from laughing, though many recuperated in time to see it again the second night.

"Everybody's Here" is a production of the Sympson Levie Co., of Jackson and was directed by Miss Ina Keefer, who is to be congratulated on her success. It was presented here under the auspices of the C. C. Club and proceeds will be given to the Community Hall Fund.

Moore, Wilmington township; Earl Lyons, Stafford township; Arthur Grube, Keyser township; Merritt Sechler, Concord township; Wier Anderson, Newville township; Glenn Hawver, Butler township. Members of the township committee in addition to the chairmen are: Fairfield, Hershel Pressler, John W. Mertz, Glenn Carter, Lester Deetz and John Voges.

All members of the township committees met in the Court House Assembly Room in the afternoon and were given instructions by A. M. Nichter, State Supervisor from Purdue University. The township committees will probably be ready to start next week, taking a survey and filling a work sheet for each farm in their township.

MRS. ESTHER KARN PASSED AWAY MONDAY

Mrs. Esther Nelson Karn, aged 76, well-known Fort Wayne resident, died of carcinoma at 10:45 A. M. Monday at her home, 1402 Fairfield Ave., after an extended illness.

Mrs. Karn, who was widely known as a poet, dramatic reader and musician, operated a music store in Fort Wayne for many years. She formerly operated stores in the Strand Theatre Building, and on Barr and South Calhoun Sts. During recent years she had operated the store in her home.

The deceased was the widow of Samuel A. Karn, who also operated a music store in Fort Wayne. Mrs. Karn was the author of several books of poetry and prose and had given many public programs.

Mrs. Karn was a sister to the late Mesdames W. C. Patterson and Walter Abel, of St. Joe.

DELUGE OF APPLICATIONS FOR DEKALB AGE PENSIONS

The DeKalb County Board of Public Welfare, created by an act of the last legislature, is being deluged with applications for relief, particularly for old age pensions. Individual members of the board, especially, are receiving requests for help.

Members of the board as individuals cannot pass on applications. They must be filed with Miss Nora Brown, who will have an office in the court house and then the board as a body will pass on applications at meetings to be held once a month.

The county board cannot function however, until the state board certifies in writing to the board of county commissioners that the welfare board as prescribed by law. The state board hopes at an early date to certify to the county board bue before that can be done, rules and regulations which the act provides must be promulgated and applications cannot be accepted until such rules are issued from headquarters at Indianapolis.

J. C. Hull, of St. Joe, is a member of this board.

COMMISSIONERS APPOINT JUSTICE OF THE PEACE

Acting upon a petition circulated by William Hurni, the commissioners at their April session, acted favorable and appointed H. G. Hursh, of St. Joe, as Justice of the Peace for this section of DeKalb county and particularly St. Joe.

As soon as he is provided with the docket, register and other material necessary, Harry will be ready for business.

Enforcing officers here have always complained about having to take offenders of the law to Auburn for hearing and then before hearings could be had, were defeated in their efforts to curb willful violations and many times cases never called.

The public, of course, will now await the action of police officers in this section, as to their eagerness to correct some of the offenses that they see and yet we hope that it will not be necessary to use the court for such purpose.

At the same session of the commissioners court they awarded a contract for tar, asphalt and oil for the county highways to L. P. Cavett of near Cincinnati. The quarterly bread contract for the county infirmary went to E. A. Baker, Auburn, and the gerocery contract to M. Lumm, of Auburn. The board approved gravel bids of Burtzner & Stonestreet and Orla Willennar.

CLUB ENTERTAINED AT SPENCERVILLE

Mrs. Dr. Baumgartner very charmingly entertained the Ladies' Literary Club at her home in Spencerville last Wednesday evening, April 8. It was the last meeting of the club for this year and was well attended.

Very interesting work on governmental departments was presented by Mrs. Avis Staman. Mrs. Harriett Johnson gave an encouraging discussion of what is being done for the blind in our state.

Special entertainment for the evening was introduced by a comedy skit, entitled "There's One Born Every Minute," enacted by Mrs. O. K. Shull as a dignified professor and Miss Janalyce Rouls as the typical rube from the country. Mrs. Doris Ruder, of Spencerville, sang two delightful numbers, accompanied by Mrs. Baumgartner.

As a surprise little Billy Hercules, of Fort Wayne, entertained with two groups of clever readings in costume. For the musical parts he was ably assisted by Mrs. Baumgartner at the piano. Billy's specialty was greatly enjoyed and appreciated by the club.

The meeting closed with a brief business session, in which it was voted that the club become members of the Universal Federation of Women's Clubs. The treasurer's and secretary's reports for the past year were read and approved. Then the president expressed her sincere appreciation for all cooperation during the past year that made it successful.

There is little change in the list of officers for the new year which is as follows: Mrs. Cora Curie, president; Mrs. Avis Staman, vice president; Mrs. Inez Hadsell, treasurer; Miss Violet May, recording secretary; Mrs. Lillian Buckingham, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Belle Woodcox, parliamentarian, and Mrs. Lora Leighty, critic.

At the close of the meeting the hostess served dainty refreshments to a large group of guests and members. Special guests for the evening included Mrs. Marguerite Hercules and son, Billy, of Fort Wayne, Mrs. Lizzie Milliman, of St. Joe, Mrs. Maude Beams, Mrs. Doris Ruder, Mrs. Ruby Kraft, Mrs. Winifred Shook, Mrs. Golden High, all of Spencerville, and Mrs. Belle Barney, of Hicksville.

Purple Martins arrived this week in St. Joe.

J. C. Hull and F. B. Leighty partook of a fish supper Tuesday evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Graham, in Auburn.

Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Pincheon, of Fremont, Ind., and Mrs. John Jacobs and daughter, Connie, of San Diego, Calif., were Sunday afternoon guests in the home of Mrs. Wm. Randall.

Representatives of the gross income tax division of Indiana were in town last week checking up on the merchants, trying to get a little more money out of them, but they are not making any effort to pick up the fellow who is evading it entirely.

ED HOWEY FOUND DEAD IN BED

Ed Howey, farmer living 3 miles north of St. Joe, at the crossing of the Wabash railroad and Road 8, was found dead in bed Monday noon by his brother, Russell, of Fort Wayne, and Tom Brunson, a near neighbor.

Russell had come from Fort Wayne to visit his brother, bringing a dinner for them both. He could not get in the home or arouse anyone. He went to the Brunson home to see whether they knew anything about him. The two men returned to the home and gained entrance thru a window and found him dead in bed.

It is thought he died Sunday night some time and without a struggle.

Mr. Howey had been poorly for a long time being afflicted with tuberculosis. While he was about, he became so weak that he could hardly walk.

The body was removed to the Johnson funeral home at Butler, where the last rites were held Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with burial in Newville cemetery.

Mr. Howey was 50 years of age, and is survived by two brothers, Russell, of Ft. Wayne, and George, of Butler.

CUSTOMERS TO SIT WHILE DRINKING

The state alcoholic beverage commission has fined Roy Partlow, of Indianapolis $25 for serving liquor to persons standing. Under its power to regulate licenses without going to court, the commission acted on reports from investigators that patrons were served in violation of the legal ban on standing to drink. The fine was said to be the first assessed by the commission for such violation. The commission has required stools at all bars.

This will probably work to the advantage of the saloon keeper. A person will not be so loud or noticable sitting as standing, and again they will be able to control themselves better sitting, and when they find they really have a package, they won't even care.

CHICK BROODING SCHOOL AND CLINIC

Poultry raisers of DeKalb County are reminded of the chick brooding school and chick clinic to be held Friday afternoon, April 17, at 1:30 P. M. in the Court House Assembly Room in Auburn.

William Kohlmeyer, of Purdue University, will be present and will help solve the farmer's chick brooding troubles. Those having chicks that are showing signs of sickness, are asked to bring them to this meeting and have them posted. Valable information will be given relative to the reduction of chick losses.

This school takes the place of the annual chick brooding tour which has previously been conducted in the county. Everyone is welcome and urged to attend the school.

Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm took Miss Merle Wilson, of Butler, to the Richmond state hospital Tuesday. She was committed to the institution by Judge Endicott.

Dr. A. E. Osterberg, of the Mayo clinic has greeted the hay fever season with a word of cheer for you folks who can't look at the countryside these spring days without sneezing. "Hay fever can be cured," he said. "It's a tedious process, and in the meantime you'd better stay away from the hillside and rill and sleep in air-conditioned rooms — but if you have the patience you can be cured."

Onion Sold as a Lily Bulb Legally in New York City

An onion is a lily, not only botanically but legally.

A seed merchant tells that some time ago a bright young man loaded a pushcart with crimson bulbs, wheeled them to a New York ferry station, and did a lively business selling "allium cepa lilies" to home-going commuters, relates the Milwaukee Jornal.

Somebody had him arrested; said he was peddling ordinary red onions. He admitted that, but the judge discharged him. An allium cepa lily, declared the court, is an onion.

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name

By
RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

A Robertson?

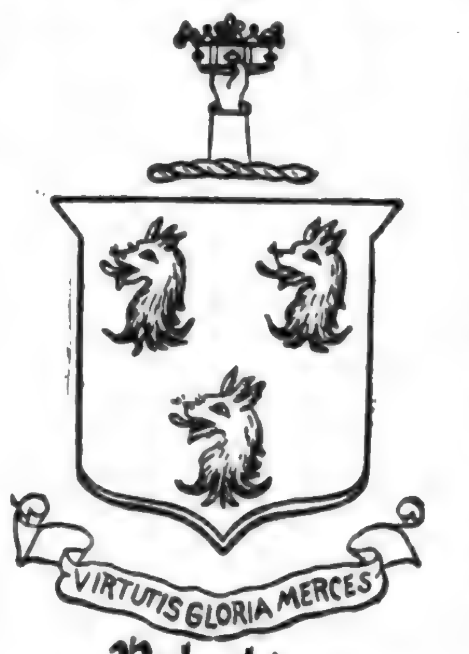
THIS is an old, old name, perhaps the most ancient of all Scottish surnames. It is claimed that Robertsons and Robinsons were Thanes, belonging to the oldest nobility of their native country, being firmly established there before the coming of William the Conqueror in the Eleventh century.

Robertsons trace descent to the ancient earls of Athol, whose house sprang from Duncan, king of Scotland, eldest son of Malcolm III.

Robert Bruce I was the son of Isabelle, great-granddaughter of David I, a Robertson, thus connecting the family with all the Scottish kings down to James VI.

The Robertson clan was seated in the highlands of Perthshire. The first to assume the name as a surname was Robert Reach, noted for his excursions into the lowlands of Scotland. He is credited as being the hero who delivered up to the vengeance of the government the two slayers of James I. For this he was rewarded with a crown charter erecting his estates into a free barony and given a coat of arms.

The motto on the arms shown, "Virtutis gloria merces," "glory is the reward of bravery," refers to this feat of the first Robertson to take the surname. The meaning of the name is derived from two Saxon words, "rod" and "bert," or "famous in council."



VIRTUTIS GLORIA MERCES

Robertson

There were many distinguished men and women by this name in every period of Scottish and English history. William Ewart Gladstone was a descendant of the Robertsons of Rossshire.

In America there were dozens of first settlers by the name of Robertson, too many to mention in this brief sketch but they were represented in both the Massachusetts Bay colony and in the Virginia colony. Consequently, there is a host of descendants in every part of the country. These descendants are eligible to many patriotic organizations because of the conspicuous services rendered by these sturdy Robertson pioneers, who constituted an important factor in building a new nation both in Colonial and Revolutionary times.

Patrick Henry of Virginia was a descendant of William Robertson of Edinburgh.

Gen. James Robertson, also a Virginian of Scottish parentage, accompanied Daniel Boone on one of his famous frontier expeditions beyond the Alleghenies. General Robertson explored Tennessee, founded settlements at Watauga, and in 1779 founded the city of Nashville. His brilliant campaigns with the Indians won the rank and title of brigadier general bestowed upon him by Washington in 1790.

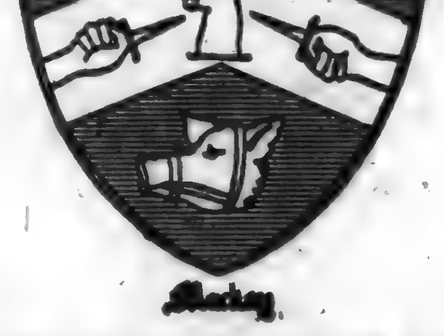
A Mackay?

THE ancient name of the Clan Mackay was Morgan, whose members were people of the purest Celtic stock. Their domain was in the extreme north of Scotland and they bore the onslaught of the early Norse invaders.

A chieftain of the clan was Lord Reay, a great diplomat, whose ancestors raised 2,000 men for service in the Continental wars in the Seventeenth century. He was made governor of Bergen. Another leader was Chamberlain of Holland.



Mackay

The war-cry of the Mackays was "The White Banner of Mackay," and their badge "Bulrush."

The plaid is in varying shades of green with black stripes. The shield of the family arms is shown here.

One of the first of this clan to come to America was Daniel, who settled in Newton, Mass., before 1673.

FARM KITCHEN GOES MODERN AS LABOR-SAVING MODE ENTERS

Modern labor-saving devices have changed the American kitchen from a place of drudgery, for the housewife, to a place where foods are scientifically prepared in a few minutes with little effort. And the newest cooking equipment has turned it into a room of outstanding attractiveness.

Gleaming porcelain has worked a miracle in the kitchen's appearance. This sparkling, clean material, which is used extensively on modern ranges, has replaced the dull, drab, lifeless materials formerly used. This new kitchen beauty has been extended to rural homes as well as to those in the cities. The development of gas-pressure stoves, which may be used anywhere, has kept pace with stoves that use natural gas and electricity.

Floors, once neglected because of the hard use they were subjected to in the operation of the old-fashioned kitchen, together with walls and ceiling have been toned up to match the exquisite beauty of the porcelain enamel.

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"Snapping Doom"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter.

MAKE room for Pete Gill of New York City.

Pete is today's Distinguished Adventurer, and since there's always room for one more in the Adventurers' Club, we won't have any trouble finding a seat for him. Pete is a ship steward—not a steward on a big ocean liner, but the sort of one who has charge of the feeding of the crew on a tramp steamer. That kind of a steward goes a heck of a lot of places and sees a heck of a lot of things. And usually, he has a heck of a lot of things happen to him, too.

Well, sir, Pete is no exception to that rule. He's had plenty of things happen to him. But the most hair-raising of them all was that adventure in Australia, in the spring of 1922 His ship sailed out of San Francisco in May, and its first stop was at a port that went by the peculiar name of Rockhampton Meat Works.

It was just a canning factory dock, about four miles from the town of Rockhampton on the northeast coast of Australia. Rockhampton itself was only a small town. The whole doggone region wasn't very thickly populated. Between the town and the meat works there was a strip of desert that wasn't inhabited at all.

It was Pete's first trip to Australia and he wanted to see the place, so he decided to take a walk to Rockhampton. Before he left he arranged to meet some of his shipmates in town at a pub run by a man named Jack Oak. He started out about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. And as he left a longshoreman warned him: "Watch out for dingoes. This part of the country is full of them."

Ever Hear of Dingoes? They're Wild Dogs

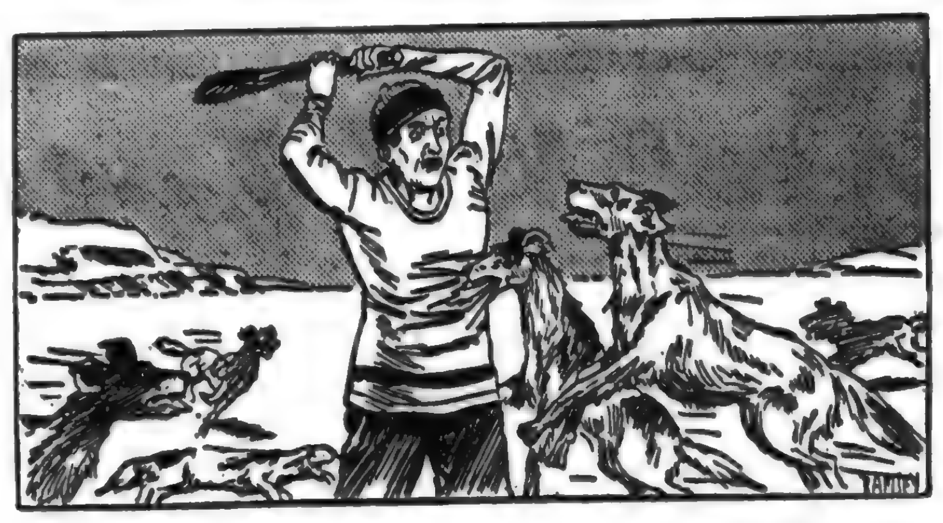
Pete had heard of dingoes—the wild dogs of Australia—but he had never thought there'd be any that near the coast. He didn't take the longshoreman's warning any too seriously, but he did cut himself a good stout stick to defend himself with, just in case some of those wild pooches did come along.

Pete walked for about two miles without seeing a sign of any wild animal. He had covered half his journey by then, and he was beginning to think that longshoreman's story was just a lot of horse feathers. Then suddenly he heard a sharp yelp behind him and whirled about. There, not a hundred feet away from him were six dingoes, their heads down, foam dripping from their jaws, making for him at full speed.

Pete knew better than to try to run from a pack of dogs. That was just what they wanted. A dog is most dangerous when pursuing a fleeing quarry. He stood in his tracks and faced the oncoming beasts, thanking his lucky stars that he had stopped to cut the stick, which he now held poised, ready to swing at the first dingo that came at him.

"In a few seconds," Pete says, "they were on me. I swung the stick and beat the first one off. I had barely time to whip the stick up again when another jumped. I knocked that one down. Then the dogs drew off a bit and began to circle around me."

That was what Pete had been afraid of. Once they began lunging at him from all sides, he would not be able to defend himself. He'd have given anything at that moment for a tree—a wall—a rock—anything he could get his back up against. Anything that would keep those snarling, snapping devils out in front of him, where he could hold them off. But on that flat, sandy stretch of Australian desert there was no shelter for miles.



The Snarling Devils Were Lunging at Him From All Sides.

Odds Against Him Were Six to One.

Behind him a third dog growled and closed in. Pete turned to beat him off, and as he did so another leaped at his throat. If that dog had made it the battle would have been all over—but somehow he managed to get his stick between him and the animal. A fifth dog jumped and tore the sleeve off Pete's coat.

For ten minutes Pete fought on. He didn't get off unscathed, either. That dog that had taken his coat sleeve had taken a little flesh along with it. His trousers were in shreds, and blood was streaming from his fingers, legs and arms. "I was pretty weak from swinging," he says, "and from the loss of blood, although by that time I had almost beaten one of the dingoes to death, they were still coming at me."

Courage Plus a Big Stick Saved Him.

Then the battle began to turn in Pete's favor. Two of the dingoes ran away. Another was laid out on the sand, half dead from the beating Pete had given it. He made another vicious swing and laid out another dog, but the remaining two still kept coming.

By that time courage began to come creeping back into Pete's body. He began to feel that maybe he could handle those two remaining dogs after all. And then over the top of a sand dune came a man—a native of the country. He raised a rifle and there was a sharp crack. The last two dogs turned and ran, and in another minute Pete was being half carried toward the town of Rockhampton.

The Australian took Pete to Jack Oak's pub, and they put a couple of stiff drinks of brandy into him and tied up his wounds. After that, Pete felt better again. Jack Oak drove him back to his ship in his car, and the ship's doctor did the rest. But here's the joke of the whole business. "If I had only known enough to light a match," says Pete, "I'd have been all right, because the dingoes don't like fire and won't go anywhere near it."

Tobacco Used as Remedy for Cholera in France

During the cholera epidemic in France in 1831 the use of tobacco was said to induce immunity. To ward off illness while the great plague of 1665 was in progress in London everyone was urged to smoke. Small children were compelled to take tobacco. At Eton classes were instructed to pause and light up at frequent intervals, writes Charles Smutny in the Chicago Tribune.

Who first brought the plant to Europe is not established, nor is it certain who smoked the first pipeful. Jean Nicot, whose name remains today in nicotine, sent tobacco seeds to France about 1560. Within five years Sir John Hawkins returned to England with tobacco. Most of Europe and parts of Africa and Asia had the weed by the opening of the Seventeenth century. Snuff was preferred in France for many years. The "drinking of tobacco," as smoking was termed in England, became common and later fashionable through the example of Sir Walter Raleigh.

Every schoolboy knows the legend of the drenching of Sir Walter Raleigh by his valet. This faithful fellow, for the first time seeing smoke issuing from the mouth and nostrils of his master, believed him to be afire and promptly emptied a bowl of water, ale, or beer over Sir Walter. The beverage changes as do the characters in the anecdote. Slightly varied versions are given for Richard Tarleton and others. Another Sir Walter Raleigh yarn involves a wager with Queen Elizabeth. He bet that he could weigh tobacco smoke. First he weighed a pipeful of tobacco, then smoked it and subtracted the weight of the ashes.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

A Tribute to the Master

IT MAY be news to some that Baron Munchausen, champion liar of all times, was a real person who really did exist. (No foolin').

The real Baron Munchausen was born in 1720 in the little town of Bodenwerder, on the Weser river, Germany. Like other German youths of his day he served as an officer of the Russian army against the Turks. Retiring at the age of thirty, he returned home to live and to talk.

The baron's delightful conception of a talk was to seat himself at a generously supplied table and relate his fabulous adventures to a charmed circle. All his tall tales were about himself; most of them concerned also his famous horse.

Once he almost lost the horse. Riding over snow at night, the Baron, so he said, hitched to what seemed to be a post. He went to sleep and, on awakening, found the snow melted and his steed hanging by the bridle from a church steeple!

The old home town of Bodenwerder has erected a monument in memory of its most distinguished son. The monument shows Baron Munchausen seated on his famous half-a-horse, the latter drinking at a fountain but unable to quench its thirst because all the water ran away.

The baron didn't know it but the sturdy horse had been cut in two by a falling portcullis as his master rode hastily into a besieged town.

"Relatively Speaking—"

GORDON C. LYNCH of Wilmette, Ill., is a gentleman farmer forced by economic conditions into the path of self-preservation.

"When I started production of superior eggs west of Waukegan, Ill.," says Lynch, "my setup consisted of 257 laying hens; but within eight days the establishment increased by exactly nineteen of my own and my wife's relatives.

"These volunteer devotees of drum sticks and white meat made serious inroads on my supply of hens. Something must be done.

"At great trouble and expense I obtained two flamingoes and three swans which I permitted to intermingle with some chickens in a special pen. Soon we began to hatch a peculiar species of fowl, featuring a neck which stretched from one room's end to another. One neck, indifferently cooked and laid out on a special table, provided food for all my visiting relatives. Two of them pretty near satisfied the kinfolk of Mrs. Lynch.

"Our food problem was solved but other hazards arose. Relatives continued in such numbers I was afraid the laying hens would become excited. The relatives were jolly, carefree, distinctly informal. So I added a penguin to the special pen and his correct, black-and-white attire soon contributed a quite formal flavor to the necks which discouraged guests. Relatively speaking, we are now free of all problems."

Hat Fit for a Queen

SHERIDAN GALLAGHER says that his annual income is the highest in Chicago. That's because he manages the Board of Trade observatory, more than one-ninth of a mile above the pavements.

Gallagher's office is directly below a statue of Ceres, pagan goddess of grains and harvests, whose featureless face and aluminum form serve also as a smokestack for its own and an adjacent building.

"Some folks are difficult to please," Gallagher philosophizes, squinting up at the statue. "That building next door is so much lower a terrific draft is created by our smokestack. It's necessary for shovels and other articles to be fastened in the engine room, else they'll come flying out around the feet of Ceres.

"One sparkling day a woman visitor arrived in the tower. The wind was right and even the sand dunes across Lake Michigan were visible. But the marvelous sight failed to impress the lady.

"As she turned her back on it, a handful of woman's apparel came scooting out of the smokestack, a small hat actually whirling until finally it rested at a rakish angle across the smooth brow of Ceres.

"Actuaries tell me the chances are 148,497 to 1 against such a remarkable performance. But the woman visitor merely shrugged her shoulders and departed. The hat, she remarked coldly, was a last year's model."

Pure Iron Unknown

Although about 700,000,000 tons of iron are in use in the United States, not an ounce of chemically pure iron has ever been produced, states a writer in the New York Herald-Tribune. If the production of a quantity of pure iron could be accomplished, a revolution in the iron and steel industries would be likely to result from its investigation. The properties of pure iron are unknown and are merely guessed at on the basis of samples of high degrees of purity. The purest samples produced show unusual properties. Those made by methods used for determining the atomic weight of iron, by purification in a hydrogen flame, are immune to rust. Even when placed in pure water and oxygen for several months they showed no sign of rusting.

LARGEST ELECTRIC SIGN DEPICTS A SEA SCENE ON BROADWAY

New York.—A huge electric display, the largest of its kind the world has ever seen, is now illuminating New York's famous Broadway.

Extending one full city block, the sign towers ten stories high and represents a million dollar investment.

The display depicts a tropical seascene with gigantic multi-colored fish gliding about in gentle, unhurried movements among rhythmic waves of sea-green light. Bubbles rise lazily to the top of the sign. The Wrigley chewing gum company, for whom the sign has been designed, carries out the soothing psychological effect with the message "Steadies the Nerves."

The sign contains 1,084 feet of neon tubing, almost 70 miles of insulated wire. More than 29,000 lamp receptacles and eight tons of galvanized sheet metal are used. The annual wattage consumed is sufficient to operate all the radios in the United States for two hours, while the electric current required for the display would serve every need of a city of 10,000.

A GREAT CONTRIBUTION TO EASIER, FASTER MORE ECONOMICAL FARMING

Guarantee— This heavy, Super-Traction tread is guaranteed not to loosen from the tire body under any conditions, and all other parts of the tire are fully guaranteed to give satisfaction.

THREE years ago Harvey S. Firestone conceived the idea that farm work would be easier, faster, and more economical if it were done on rubber.

It was on the Old Homestead farm in Columbiana County, Ohio, which Mr. Firestone still operates, that he directed engineers and developed a practical pneumatic tire for tractors and every other wheeled implement on the farm. The result was a super-traction tire so unusual in design and so amazing in performance that a patent was issued on the tire by the United States Patent Office at Washington.

On tractors, Firestone Ground Grip Tires will do the work 25 per cent faster with a saving of 25 per cent in fuel cost. On sprayers, combines, binders and other farm implements they reduce draft 40 to 50 per cent; do not pack the soil, sink into soft ground or make ruts; protect equipment; do not damage crops and vines; speed up every farm operation.

One set of tires will fit several implements. Tires can be changed quickly from one implement to another. Two or three sets are all you need to take care of practically all your farm implements.

See the Firestone Tire Dealer, implement dealer or Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store today—and in placing your order for new equipment, be sure to specify Firestone Ground Grip Tires on your new tractor or farm implement.

WPA Mural Placed in Asylum for Insane

Chicago.—Works Progress Administration artists have just completed a mural 44 feet long and 6 feet wide, at a cost of almost $2,000. Eighteen of the "boondoggling" painters were employed on the object of art, at salaries of $94 a month.

When the mural was completed it was placed where it is hoped it will be of interest and diversion to hundreds of art lovers—in the state asylum for the insane at Elgin, Ill.

Democratic Party Official Gets $90,000 in Salaries

Washington, D. C.—Walter J. Cummings, treasurer of the Democratic National committee, is being paid salaries and fees amounting to $90,000 a year, all from semi-public offices to which he was appointed by Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, it was reported here.

Cummings was formerly a Chicago manufacturer, but his business closed and is now in process of liquidation. When the New Deal came into power he was made executive assistant to the secretary of the treasury, and later chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation. In 1934 Jones named him chairman of the board of directors of the Continental Illinois National bank (into which the RFC has put $50,000,000) at a salary of $60,000 a year, later raised to $75,000. Now Jones has named him as one of the three trustees of the Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific railroad (which has benefited to the extent of $11,499,462 of RFC money) at a salary of $15,000. The total of $90,000 is just $15,000 more than the salary of the President of the United States.

How WPA Brings Light to Youth of America

New York.—Students of the Stuyvesant high school, assembled for a presentation of a wholesome little skit called "School Days," as presented by actors of the WPA drama project here, found themselves suddenly whisked into the giddy whirl of Parisian night life, while faculty members murmured to themselves that "school was never like this for us."

Through a change in the cataloging of WPA plays, "School Days," known as Play 4A, was re-numbered 8A. Play 4A became "Parisian Nights," a spicy revue for presentation at veterans' hospitals and other places where the WPA felt it might be appreciated. When 4A was ordered for the high school, "Parisian Nights" instead of "School Days" was sent out. Its short skirts and pert little skits smacked unmistakably of the cheap burlesque show variety, but the actors, who are taking federal money to carry out orders to the letter, put on the revue, anyway.

The WPA has appropriated $17,000,000 for the employment of actors, writers and musicians.

WPA Trains Poor Girls for Service to Wealthy

Washington, D. C.—Half a million New Deal dollars will be spent in teaching young women on relief to become servants in well-to-do homes, it was announced by the Works Progress administration here. Schools in the arts of dusting furniture and serving thumb in bowl of soup will be established in New York city, the District of Columbia, and in 21 states. Uniforms and $1 a week for carfare are being doled out to those enrolled.

The new project follows on the heels of a WPA project in Chicago which hired women to act as housekeepers for city housewives who were not feeling well enough to care for their homes and children.

Efficiency Called Stint to WPA's Lofty Ideals

Chicago.—An idea of the true meaning of "boondoggling" in its purest form at last came to light in a statement of George Melville Smith, supervisor of 229 artists working on a WPA project here, the largest number of artists ever to work together under one roof—except on another WPA project in New York.

The artists are painting 10,000 posters—all alike—on oil cloth. Stencils are being used for the lettering, but all posters are individually colored by hand. Asked why stencils weren't used for all operations, Smith said:

"Why, if we did that we'd be through in no time. We've got to keep the hands of all these people busy."

Taxes—America's Biggest Bill

Washington, D. C.—America's biggest bill is now taxes, Federal, state and local, which under the New Deal now amount to about $10,000,000,000 a year. This is an amount equal to almost half the gold in the world, and all the gold the United States owns, it was computed here. It is a bill greater than America's food, clothing or rent bills.

Price of Executive "Ability"

Washington, D. C.—The resettlement administration, under Rexford Guy Tugwell, No. 1 Brain Truster of the New Deal, so far has used up $11,620,000 to administer the spending of $21,056,753 on rural rehabilitation and relief. In other words, every time $2 is spent its costs more than $1 to determine where it should go.

The Spirit of Jefferson

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

"Since the days when Jefferson expounded his code of political philosophy, the whole world has become his pupil—"

Many Americans undoubtedly recalled that tribute during the recent birthday honors to the author of our imperishable Declaration of Independence.

How well, one wonders, do those of his pupils who wield political power today, remember the teachings of the Sage of Monticello? How faithfully do they apply his principles? Let's recall—for them and for ourselves—some of the precepts that Thomas Jefferson left us as a guide. Here, in his own words, is a record of his answers to many of the problems which confront us today—

Our Constitution

"I do, with sincere zeal, wish an inviolable preservation of our present Federal Constitution according to the true sense in which it was adopted by the states."

"No Constitution was ever before so well calculated as ours for extensive empire and self-government."

Public Debt

"Taxation follows public debt, and in its train wretchedness and oppression."

Economy in Government

"I am for a government rigorously frugal and simple."

"We must make our election between economy and liberty, or profusion and servitude."

Centralization of Power

"It is not by the consolidation or centralization of powers, but by their distribution that good government is effected."

"Were we directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, we should soon want bread."

Personal Liberty

"A wise and frugal government, which shall restrain men from injuring one another, which shall leave them otherwise free to regulate their own pursuits of industry and improvement, and shall not take from the mouth of labor the bread it has earned. This is the sum of good government."

Freedom of the Press

"Our liberty cannot be guarded but by the freedom of the press, nor that be limited without danger of losing it."

The People

"If we can prevent the government from wasting the labors of the people under the pretense of taking care of them, they must remain happy."

So long as our public men—and we, ourselves—remember these teachings, the spirit of Jefferson lives. When we forget them, that spirit dies—and with it the true spirit of America.

Imports Displace U. S. Farm Lands

Farmers See Foreign Goods First Hand; Learn True Effect of Scarcity.

DES MOINES, IOWA.—Foreign grown corn, wheat, oats and flaxseed aggregating 98 million bushels—equivalent to the yield from more than 1,700,000 good Iowa acres—came into the United States during 1935, when 1,500,000 acres of Iowa corn land were taken out of production by the New Deal crop curtailment program.

Visible evidence that these imports were real and substantial was provided for farmers in an exhibit which was the center of crowds in a hotel here for several days. The importance of these imports and the manner in which they had passed to foreigners the profits ordinarily accruing by right to the Iowa farmer, was demonstrated by computations of the actual amount of Iowa farm land production they had displaced under Roosevelt economics of scarcity. The same manner of demonstration might be worked out for any agricultural state, using Department of Commerce and Department of Agriculture reports.

Actual Specimens Displayed.

Among the specimens actually on display, which spectators were at liberty to feel, examine and appraise, were, in part, the following, all bought on the open market in the Middle West:

Canned peas, carrots, string beans, asparagus and other vegetables from Belgium, Italy and France; grain from the Argentine, Canada, Poland and other countries; slabs of Polish bacon, which is being distributed in the United States at the rate of 750,000 pounds a month, at prices with which the American product falls far short of competing; Polish cooked ham; Dutch frankforts; canned roast beef and corned beef from the Argentine, Brazil and Uruguay; foreign canned sea foods, which are enjoying greatly increased sales as a substitute for American meats, and a host of other items.

There were even dressed beef and pork from New Zealand on display.

Besides the comparison on corn, it was shown that 27,488,870 bushels of wheat imported during 1935 displaced the production of 187,884 acres of Iowa wheat land, and that the 10,108,908 bushels of imported oats displaced 279,522 acres of Iowa oat land. The computations were worked out on the average yield of 11.8 bushels of wheat per acre in 1934-1935, and the average yield of 35.8 bushels of oats per acre in the last ten years.

Flaxseed Imports Mount.

It was further shown that flaxseed which had been imported, largely from the orient, if grown here and sold by American farmers, could have put 177,870 acres of Iowa flaxseed lands into production.

Despite the fact that the New Deal promised the farmer that through the repeal of prohibition he would regain his market for grains and other agricultural products, the exhibit revealed that 249,520,279 gallons of inedible molasses were imported from foreign countries during 1935. Inedible molasses, largely imported, is used by American liquor manufacturers to distill alcohol, which can be distilled from Iowa corn. These imports were shown to have replaced the production of 1,050,611 Iowa acres.

Bank Pays Off, Quits; Hits New Deal Policies

Deland, Ill.—Officials of the First National bank decided to pay off its depositors and close up.

The depositors were paid in full, the sum amounting to $475,000. The owners of the bank said: "The government's rigid restrictions on banks have made banking in small towns unprofitable."

There was no further explanation but citizens learned that the owners of the bank objected to carrying the large amount of government securities that for three years has been forced into the banking channels from Washington.

Taxes Milk Public

Chicago.—"Every time you or your children swallow a glass of milk, you have to swallow a tax," writes B. C. Forbes, noted economic expert, in a newspaper here. "There are 58 taxes on your loaf of bread; taxes of $6.70 a year on your telephone, more than $1 in taxes each month on your electric or gas meter."

Under the New Deal, more than 20 cents out of every dollar goes for federal taxes, direct or indirect.

America's Taxes Keep Growing

Washington, D. C.—The United States treasury reported that $80,000,000 more in taxes were collected from American citizens during the first seven months of the 1936 fiscal year than in the comparable period of the preceding year. This was despite the reduction of a quarter of a billion dollars in processing taxes.

National Debt Speeds Upward

Washington, D. C.—During February the national debt, which stood at an all-time record high as the month began, increased at the rate of $7,000 a minute, $420,000 an hour, $5,040,000 a day and $1,839,600,000 a year.

IN A HUNDRED YEARS

(By Charles Oluf Olsen)

Recenly a sober crowd of men—chemists and chemical engineers—met in New York and talked shop. In a lighter moment predictions were made as to future achievements. A young engineer prophesied the following:

By 2036 personal visiting will be a thing of the past and done through television.

Mass meetings will be attended by sitting at home and listening in.

Airplane speeds will reach 1,000 miles an hour; travel to Mars will be feasible through discovery of the right sort of fuel.

Life will be indefinitely prolonged; major human diseases will all be conquered; growth will be controled so that beeves as large as mastadons and eggs as large as footballs would be common. Indigestion will be banished through hormones and life in general made richer and happier.

Labor will be reduced to two hours per day, clothing will be cheaper, and existence largely a matter of push-buttons.

Among real advances made in chemistry it was reported that grass had been successfully substituted for spinach and other green vegetables. Wheat and barley had been grown to the jointing stage and dried and ground, producing a powder that tastes and looks like malted milk. It was said to contain all the well-known vitamins and was so rich in food essentials as to double the egg production of hens.

MRS. GEORGE B. SIMMONS

Mrs. George B. Simmons, wife of a Missouri farmer, will be the principal speaker at the annual banquet of the Indiana Republican Editorial Association to be held in Indianapolis on Saturday night, April 25. Mrs. Simmons was the speaker who was accorded a great ovation at the "Grass Roots" convention held in Springfield, Ill., last June. She has been a writer for some of the leading newspapers and magazines for a number of years and for several years has contributed a daily column to a group of farm belt dailies. Aside from her literary work, Mrs. Simmons directs the work of her home on a Missouri farm of 174 acres. She is the mother of five daughters and is four times a grandmother. In politics Mrs. Simmons classes herself as an independent Democrat. Observing the fallacy of economic scarcity as applied to their own farm in Missouri, Mrs. Simmons is devoting her energy as a patriotic duty to turning the thots of the American people into the proven channels that have made this country the greatest in the history of the world.

COACH BO MCMILLAN TO FEATURE BANQUET

Sport fans from over DeKalb county will have the opportunity of enjoying the letterman's banquet at Auburn K. of P. hall, on May 7, at 6:30, sponsored by the Hickory Club, of Auburn.

Guests of honor include all of the Auburn high school lettermen for the 1935-36 school year in basketball, football and track, the student business manager of each of these sports, the yell leader, Coach Cecil Young, Principal E. F. Fribley, Superintendent H. L. McKenney, Don Lash, an alumni of Auburn high school now starring on the Indiana University track and cross country squads, "Dixie" Heighway, alumni director of Indiana University and Bo McMillen, head football coach of Indiana University.

Mr. McMillen will be the principal speaker of the evening and those who will hear him are in for a real treat. Besides being a national figure as a football coach, he possesses rare qualities as a speaker which have made his services as such very much in demand throughout the middlewest. The sport fans of Auburn are very fortunate that this outstanding speaker has been secured.

Don Lash will also appear on the program. Lash is the A. A. U. cross country champion, captain of the Indiana University cross country team and star distance runner on the Indiana University track team. He holds many track and Big Ten conference records. The trophies which he has won, displayed in an Auburn store window some time ago testified to the records established by the Auburn young man. Lash has competed in most of the major collegiate meets and has won these honors in very fast company.

Another big feature on the program will be the awarding of the Hickory trophy for the 1935-36 season.

The Hickory Club has as one of its major programs, the promotion of athletics. The Hickory trophy and this banquet at which Don Lash will be honored are in line with this program.

The tickets have necessarily been priced at $1 to make this event as self supporting as possible. A good meal is assured. Tickets may be secured from any member of the Hickory Club. In buying tickets, alumni of Indiana University are requested to make known that fact so that reservations can be made for them at the special Indiana University table which will be provided. Those who intend to go are urged by the Hickory Club to buy their tickets now as it is confidently expected that the dining room will be filled to capacity and that it will be necessary to buy tickets early to avoid disappointment.

DIVIDEND ORDERED PAID BY BUTLER BANK

Paul Heichelbeck, of Auburn, representing the state department of financial institutions, Friday was granted authority in the DeKalb circuit court to pay an additional dividend of 8⅓% to creditors of the Knisely Brothers & Co. bank, of Butler.

Mr. Heichelbeck reported that he has $12.170.30 available from assets of the bank to pay a 3 per cent dividend and $21,638.93 from collections from stockholders to pay 5⅓ per cent.

The total of this distribution will be $33,809.23 and checks will be mailed April 28 to more than 740 depositors who had funds in the institution.

The claims allowed aggregated $435.843, including preferred claims. The dividends paid to date including the distribution authorized Friday, total 90 per cent.

SAFETY CAMPAIGN TO BE ORGANIZED

Loren Warner, director of the accident prevention bureau, visited DeKalb county last Wednesday night and addressed a meeting at the court house, along the line of public safety.

Miss Cleo Boyle, of Butler, is the county supervisor. R. L. Holben acted as chairman of the meeting.

There will be four committees: Educational, legislative, enforcement and engineering. Carl F. Stallman, county superintendent of schools, will head the educational committee as chairman; George Speer, of Waterloo, the legislative; L. W. Tombow, of Butler, the enforcement and Edwin L. Baker, of Auburn, the engineering. The full committee for enforcement was named at the meeting. Appointed to serve with Mr. Tombow were Dr. M. E. Klingler, of Garett; Clyde Deetz, of Ashley; Dr. C. R. Baumgartner, of Spencerville; Sheriff H. N. Grimm, of Auburn; Joseph Miser, of Waterloo and W. A. Arnold, of Corunna. The chairmen of the other committees will select their members. The next meeting will be held April 29th.

CHAPTER I

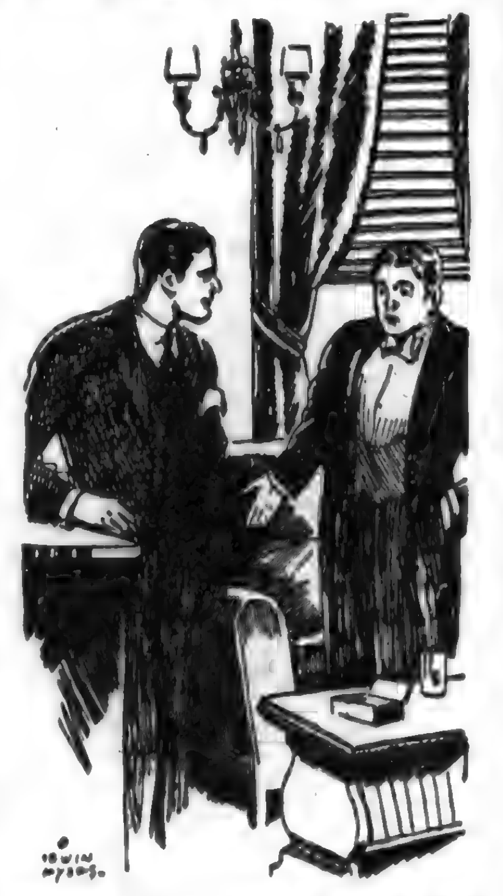
Bryn finished his story. Tall, lean, bronzed, he stood before the big crystal mirror hanging over the stone fireplace and examined his chin critically. It was a very nice chin, but Bryn was not in the least concerned with its niceness; he was trying to determine whether Burch had or had not nicked it infinitesimally. It seemed not. Burch had done his usual perfect job.

Tubby, his eyes round and distracted, dropped into one of the deep morocco armchairs and stared out at the dusk. It was pouring like smoke across the bay, sifting through the Golden Gate to blot out the sunset. The daily fleet of fishing vessels, their sails a row of tiny dark triangles against the dimming face of the sun, slipped out once more to brave the perils of the vasty deep. Below the house the waves lapped idly at the white cliff, gentle and harmless.

Tubby was not a philosopher, and he had very little imagination. To Tubby a horse was a horse, usually with four legs and a tail. It was not something over which kingdoms might be lost or with which princesses might be rescued. Waves to Tubby were waves, always wet and often chilly. But now, as he stared down through the wide plate glass window, there was a look of positive inspiration on his face, as if he were telling himself that these waves, at least, might sometimes wash the shores of China, the far, far, dangerous shores of China; that these waves might easily, small and tender though they now appeared, might easily puff and swell and lift themselves to fall with thunder and fury on one of the innocent little vessels drifting now so serenely past the sun. Life was like that, Tubby was convinced.



"Did It Ever Occur to You That Ted Holworthy Might Be Engineering This Beautiful Mix-up?"

Tubby put his head down into his hands and groaned. It sounded like a stage groan, although he was certainly sincere about it; and even if it was not his situation, which it wasn't, he felt that someone ought to react to it properly.

"Nonsense," Bryn said briskly.

Tubby looked up. His pink cheeks sagged. His mouth drooped. He would have been the picture of dejection if his yellow hair had not insisted on standing on end. But he thought he was the picture of extreme dejection.

"Look here, Bryn," he said in a woebegone voice, "you can't go through with it. I won't let you. That's final."

"Tut-tut," Bryn responded amiably. He pressed a bell on the mantelpiece. Burch, bland and serene, opened the door noiselessly. Bryn looked at him in the mirror.

"A cocktail, Burch, for Mr. Forbes. Perhaps you might put a little peppermint in it. He is a little upset."

The faint shadow of a smile hovered over Burch's impassive lips. "And for yourself, sir?"

"Thank you, no. By the way, Burch, I am being married this evening."

There was a moment of dead stillness as if even the waves had halted in their irresistible course. Then Burch swallowed, and said nobly, "Indeed, sir? Do you wish me to procure a maidservant, sir?"

Bryn looked up, startled. "A maidservant? Do we need a maidservant?"

"I was thinking of your wife, sir."

"My wife?" Bryn repeated, his eyes coming sharply to Burch's face. Then, "Ah . . . no. She will not be coming here."

"Very good, sir. What shall I pack?"

Bryn looked down at the gray suit with which, Tubby had insisted, he was desecrating the evening. He considered. "Well, shirts and things. Nothing else, except those old golf trousers I got so much mud on at Tahoe."

"Yes, sir. Nothing else? No guns? No fishing tackle? No golf clubs?"

"Nothing. By the way—I am a young engineer out of work because of the depression. Anything a young engineer out of work because of the depression wouldn't have, I wouldn't have. I've pawned it."

Burch drew a noticeable deep breath. "Very good, sir. Shall you be here to breakfast?"

"Certainly."

"And . . ."

"No, I said she wasn't coming."

"Ah . . . yes, sir. Lunch?"

"No lunch. I shall be leaving immediately after breakfast, and you needn't prepare dinner until approximately a year from tonight. I will let you know. I shall be away during that time."

"Yes, sir. And the orders for Morton?"

Bryn swung round from the glass. He regarded Burch thoughtfully. "That's so," he said meditatively. "I might have forgotten. Tell Morton to take a spanner, will you, and remove the paint—not all of it, but large, uneven portions—from the Bellaire. Tell him to take a chisel and give it some nice deep scratches. Tell him to make it look like a car I might have bought for about forty-two dollars and fifty cents from a bankrupt gangster. He might bash up the fenders, and if anything further occurs to him . . ."

"The Bellaire, sir? The new French motor? The black car?"

"All of those things," Bryn said calmly.

Tubby stood up. His eyes rested on Burch's agitated countenance. He drew a deep breath.

"That's all," Bryn said crisply.

"Yes, sir," Burch muttered despondently, and went out.

Tubby was staring at Bryn. "Anybody would think you were in love with the girl," he said.

"Would they? How nice. It sounds so much better. So much more romantic and idyllic. To be in love with one's bride instead of marrying her for her money."

"Money!" Tubby said bitterly. "Money!" He shook his head miserably. "You're making some kind of a damn fool out of yourself, Bryn. You're letting some gang pull a fast one on you, that's what you're doing. Do you think for a minute that that girl doesn't know who you are?"

"She doesn't," Bryn said calmly.

Tubby snorted. "That's a bright remark, isn't it? Very bright. Now, I ask you, how in God's name could anybody on the Pacific coast help having seen your ugly mug in the papers, how could anybody who can read help knowing about James Weldon Shipley Brynildson Third and his speed boats and his elephant tusks and his seven cars and his polo ponies?"

"I'm sure she can read," Bryn replied, unruffled. "The first time I saw her she was reading over a lot of legal documents up in Holworthy's office."

Tubby eyed him for a long moment. Then he said gustily, "Look here, Bryn. Did it ever occur to you that Ted Holworthy himself might be engineering this beautiful mix-up? Did it?"

"I can't say that it did."

"All this talking he's been doing about her. What did he tell you about her for in the first place? Oh, I know he said it was an interesting case, but that was just to get you listening. And now he's gone away just when she puts in her appearance. It all looks pretty funny to me."

"Didn't you think it was an interesting case, Tubby?"

"Well, if it was a case, yes. Certainly. Of course, I thought myself it was interesting. But you notice I didn't get all wrought up about it and start hanging around to get a look at the girl, and even if I had I wouldn't even dream of stepping into a game like this and marrying her myself."

Indian Snake Charmer Uses a Mysterious Poison Herb

Kurbad Ali, an Indian, has a contract with a medical institute to supply them with cobras, the poison of which is used for experiments. To secure his victims he employs a mysterious herb used from time immemorial by Indian snake charmers. The herb exudes an odor which does not affect human beings, but temporarily stupefies snakes, rendering them harmless.

Floyd Gibbons ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello, Everybody!

"Twelve Stories Up"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

GOING up! Take the next car, please! It's an indoor aviator who's come to tell us his tale of woe today—Distinguished Adventurer Edward T. McCrann, one of the best doggone elevator pilots that ever answered a buzzer.

Ed jumps around almost as fast as that elevator he used to drive. When I first heard from him he was living in New Haven, Conn. Two weeks later, when I had occasion to communicate with him he had moved to Washington, D. C.

It's five years since Ed has run an elevator, and he still remembers it as one of the most monotonous jobs he ever had. It was just the same old trip, from morning to night. The same old buzzer ringing and the same people getting on and off in the same old building in Hartford. Only once did anything out of the ordinary occur—but Ed admits that that occurrence relieved the job of all of its monotony for a few minutes.

It happened about 7 o'clock on a June evening in 1929. Nearly all the tenants were out of the building. The superintendent came up from the basement and started looking over the elevator. He said there might be something wrong with it because he had heard a rasping sound in the shaft that shouldn't have been there.

Elevator Man Goes Up on Top of His Car.

One look at the top told the story. Some workmen had been doing a job on the inside of the shaft. They had strung a wire to furnish them with light, and had left it behind when they finished. That wire tangled with the main cable, way up at the top, just where the cable came out of the heavy grate that supported the motor. The super asked Ed if he'd ride up on the top of the elevator to the top of the shaft and unfasten that maverick wire.

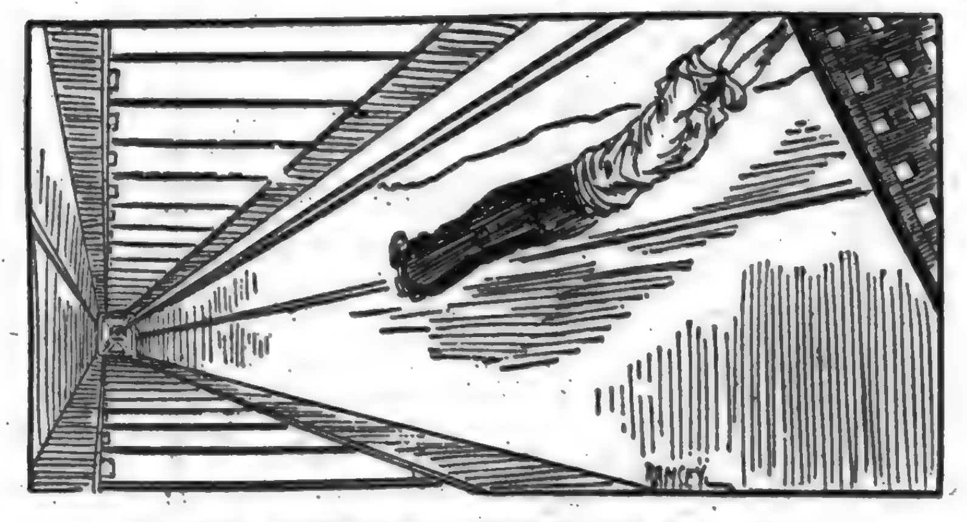
Ed was just a high school kid then. He was lean and active, and the job didn't look any great shakes to him. He consented readily. After all, it was something to break the monotony of that everlasting up and down trip. The super got into the car and dropped it down below the door level. Ed climbed on top, and up they went to the top of the shaft, just above the twelfth story.

The super ran the car slowly as they neared the top. When it got close enough so that Ed could reach the dangling wire he yelled, and the super stopped the car. The car halted just even with the twelfth floor. Ed reached up and began untangling the wire.

The superintendent opened the car door and stepped out onto the twelfth floor. "Hey, Ed," he called, "I'm going down the hall for a screw driver. I'll be right back."

Ed yelled, "All right," and went on with his work. The wire was fastened a little higher than he'd thought. He grabbed the grating under the motor and lifted himself up.

His toes were barely touching the top of the car and he was straining his free arm to reach the end of the wire when he heard someone enter the elevator below him. Thinking it was the superintendent he paid no attention. He made another lunge toward the wire—caught it.



He Clung Perilously by His Fingers to the Grating.

And then, to his consternation, the motor began to whine and the car dropped away from under him, leaving Ed in a panic, clinging to the iron grating with both hands.

By the time Ed's presence of mind came back to him the elevator was halfway down the shaft. He started to yell, but he was so close to the motor that he couldn't be heard above its noise. The elevator went clear to the bottom and stopped. The door clanged open and someone walked out. Then everything was quiet except for Ed's cries. What had happened? Could it be possible that the superintendent had forgotten all about him? Ed yelled again. The sound echoed hollowly in the long shaft. Then silence—the dead, eerie silence of an empty building. And Ed hanging by his fingers 12 stories above the ground.

"The seconds," he says, "seemed like years. Try as I might I couldn't get my mind to working. It was racing like mad trying to figure a way out, but it never found one. There just wasn't any.

"The grating was greasy and I could feel my fingers slipping—slipping. Suddenly I heard steps in the hall and yelled again. It was the superintendent coming back with the tools. He must have guessed what had happened when he heard me and saw the elevator door was closed. He yelled something to me but I was so scared I couldn't make out what he was saying. My fingers slipped a little more. Then I heard him racing down the stairs."

Superintendent and Elevator to the Rescue!

Again Ed's fingers slipped. He tried to hang on with one hand while he got a fresh hold with the other—and almost lost his grip altogether. It seemed like years—seemed as though he was holding on with nothing but his fingernails, when finally he heard the elevator start upward and knew that if he could hang on just a moment longer he'd be safe.

"There were tears in my eyes," he says, "as that car came shooting up toward me. My body was covered with sweat, and I can't say if it was cold sweat or hot. My hands slipped again as the car came on.

"I didn't have the courage to look down—didn't know how close the elevator was—when at last, my clawing fingers lost their hold on the grate. I shut my eyes as I started falling. A prayer ran through my mind and—."

And then Ed came to a stop with a thud—safe on the top of the car, about six feet from where he had started.

When Ed got off the top of that elevator cab he was limp as a rag. It wasn't until next day that he found a solution to the mystery of the moving elevator. A doctor on the twelfth floor came out in a hurry and, seeing the cab without an operator, ran it down himself.

He had heard Ed yell, he said, but paid no attention to it. "And if you could feel one hundredth of the horror I felt as I hung in that dark shaft," says Ed, "you'd realize why I shiver just a little bit, even now, when somebody mentions that doctor's name."

Success

It is said that a man can successfully lie with his eyes, but not with his mouth. The face is such an index of character that the very growth of the latter can be traced upon the former, and most of the successive lines that carve the furrowed face of age out of the smooth outline of childhood are engraved directly or indirectly by mind. There is no beautifier of the face like a beautiful spirit. The want of mind lowers all the powers of the body; but so does an evil and debased mind which is still more wonderful. —Brian Brown.

Find Castaway

A Robinson Crusoe was discovered by the crew of the French windjammer Tolosa, on Rinca island, 100 miles north of the Strait of Magellan, South America. He was clothed in goat skins and uttered guttural cries, though he led them to a natural spring when they indicated they wanted water. The man appeared to be of Nordic stock, either Scandinavian or German, or possibly British. He is considered to be a shipwrecked sailor who has lost the power of spech, probably through never having spoken to a soul for many years.

Battle of the Rattlers

FEATS of strength almost legendary, though their hero is very much alive, are heard in the Cumberland mountains of Preston Brooks, Sewanee, Tenn.

"Buck," as Preston is best known, drove a light automobile. It negotiated mountain trails easily despite a weakness for punctures. As frequently as tires went flat Buck would jerk away the offender, repair and replace it, all without bothering to jack up the wheel.

"Puncture disease annoyed me only once," Buck stated, explaining a fortnight's absence. "My last repair patch was lost, six days ago, in an isolated cove that is twenty-seven and one-half miles from anywhere.

"I got stubborn. Decided to stay there indefinitely. Finally, near starved, I headed for home, flat tire and all.

"Don't believe I could have held out if I hadn't steered into a wild cow, down on the mountainside. The flivver hit the cow plumb center and boosted her into the air. Before she landed, I'd milked and stripped her dry. Did it with my left hand, too, scooping the milk into my mouth with the right.

"When I turned the cow out to graze again only one tire had air in it. A rattlesnake attacked me and I jerked off the tire, air and all, and fenced with the snake. His hollow fangs pierced the innertube but I held on and as the tire flattened, the snake swelled. He exploded, finally, and I came home. And here I am!"

The Flying Pond

NEAR Buffalo, N. Y., lives a farmer who once had a pond back of his barn but he doesn't have it now. George H. Schicker tells the reason thus:

One evening last winter the farmer saw a flock of wild geese settle down on his pond. He ran for his shotgun but before he arrived at the pond it was too dark to see the geese plainly enough to shoot one. So he decided to wait until morning to try to bag a goose.

That night there was a sudden drop in the temperature. In the cold frosty dawn the farmer hurried out to the barn and peered around the corner. Sure enough, there were the geese sitting quietly out in the middle of the pond. He stepped out into the open and raised his weapon. Immediately the geese set up a terrific clamor. The next moment their threshing wings were carrying them high into the air and with them went the farmer's pond—frozen solidly to their legs.

Citizens of northern New York now look forward with dread to the coming of every winter. They are afraid that a large flock of wild geese may some time alight on Lake Ontario, that a sudden change will freeze it to the legs of the big birds and that they will lose their lake just as the farmer lost his pond. Residents of northern Ohio are also said to be alarmed over the possibility that the same thing may happen to Lake Erie.

Clothes and the Man

WHEN Walter Howey and Frank Carson, widely known newspaper executives, "teamed" on the Chicago Herald and Examiner years ago, their after-business adventures made history.

At five minutes past three one morning they strolled happily on Randolph street, having been persuaded to participate in a game of chance and profiting handsomely thereby.

At Clark street a ragged stranger approached. Instantly, Howey peeled $20 from his roll and showed it to the derelict.

"This is yours," orated Howey. "Just remove your clothes. Cross the street and touch the county building."

The unfortunate hesitated. He was lost.

Stepping gingerly, he removed all but b. v. d.'s, appraised the apparently deserted streets, and weakened. Howey pressed the money into his hand. "Take it," said the editor. "All you gotta do is touch the building."

As the victim, grabbing the $20, reached the county building, Carson yelled for the police. One of Chicago's finest appeared magically. "Catch him," screamed Carson, pointing. "That fellow's crazy!"

Nine seconds later the naked man, clutching $20 tightly, turned a corner in advance of the policeman, firing wildly. "Think of it," gasped Carson. "More money than he's seen in months, but naked. And not even a pawnshop open."

The sequel, heard infrequently, is when Carson arrived home an hour later his apartment was jimmied. A complete outfit of clothing was missing. Costlier objects were untouched.

Foods Deteriorate

In general, foods deteriorate on ageing with varying intensity. This is manifested by such visible conditions as mold, rot and loss of moisture which is concomitant with a hardening effect. Many times, however, this deterioration can only be detected by the change in aroma and flavor, as with butter and eggs, and coffee belongs to this class. One of the greatest causes for spoilage in foods is the presence of oxygen. This gas is instrumental in changing some of the various constituents of foods which have an affinity for it and thereby alters the flavor of the entire food. The chemical composition of the roasted coffee bean is such that it is very easily attacked by oxygen.

LIFE BEGINS AT SIXTY FIVE

Cheer up, Grandpa, don't you cry,
You'll wear diamonds by and by.
Uucle Sam has money mills
Made to grind out brand new bills.
He will help you in your cause
With his old-age pension laws.
No more worry over bills
Butcher duns, or doctor pills.
No more panic over rent
Leave that all to government.
Dine on squab and caviar,
Sport a stream line motor car.
When the blizzards bliz a bit
Off to Palm Beach gayly flit.
Lead a life of pleasure bent
But you must spend every cent.
Whoopee, Grandpa! Stay alive!
Life begins at sixty five.

This Pipe Was No 'Pipe'

Chicago.—A WPA pipe dream came to a rude awakening here when 100 of the federal "easy money" workers, after spending several days digging a long trench through ground frozen hard by weeks of sub-zero weather, found that the pipe they were going to lay had already been laid. It was a 12-inch storm sewer, 800 feet long. So the boys got several more days' work filling in the trench and trucking the new lengths of sewer-pipe back whence it came.

Another WPA "sanitary" project was begun here about the same time, when the educational division of the Hopkins organization started classes in "mental hygiene."

Taxes Paid on Drugs

New York.—Drug Trade News, a trade publication, found upon investigation that manufacturers in the drug and allied industries pay at least 71 taxes. Drug Topics, another trade paper, found that the "corner druggist" pays 78 taxes. All of these taxes are passed on to the consumer in the retail price of the drugs he buys from his "corner drug store."

W. C. COLEMAN

INVENTS NEW STOVE THAT MAKES OWN GAS

W. C. Coleman, Noted Inventor Makes It Possible for Every Home Everywhere to Enjoy Modern Gas Cooking Service at Low Cost

Housewives everywhere are enthusiastic in their praise of a new stove that makes its own gas and brings modern gas cooking service at low cost to homes anywhere. W. C. Coleman, noted inventor and pioneer manufacturer of gas-pressure appliances, regards this stove as his crowning achievement.

The new Coleman Range makes its own gas from ordinary lead-free gasoline. Lights instantly, like gas. The flame from its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners is hotter than natural gas and is easily adjusted for fast cooking or slow simmering. Its low fuel consumption makes it cheaper to use than coal, wood or kerosene.

The Coleman Range has a spacious insulated oven and drawer-type broiler. An independently controlled burner provides any heat desired for baking or broiling.

Climaxing his achievement, Mr. Coleman endowed the Coleman Safety Range with gracious beauty, style and color.

Persons wishing full information about these marvelous new Coleman Ranges, will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-238, Wichita, Kansas—Adv.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

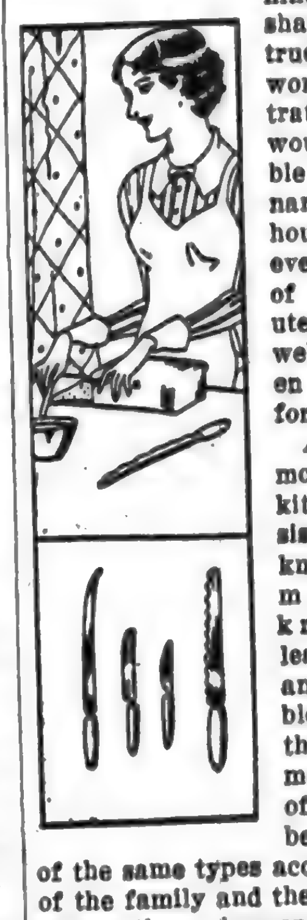
MILNESIA WAFERS THE PERFECT ANTI-ACID

The Original Milk of Magnesia Wafers

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER



THE most important implements in a kitchen are those included in the term cutlery, which, to be explicit, signifies knives and sharp-edged tools for cutting. The word is broadly and erroneously used when it includes dull instruments such as spatulas, forks and spoons, and yet common usage and kitchen parlance give a certain sanction to this comprehensive significance. Today, we shall stick to the true meaning of the word, and concentrate on knives. It would be impossible to do the culinary work of a household without even a single one of these essential utensils, and the well equipped kitchen has many kinds for many uses.

A group of the most important kitchen knives consists of carving knives 1, 2, 3, or more; paring knives, two at least, a bread knife and one or more table knives. With these as a nucleus, many more knives of various sorts can be added, or more of the same types according to the size of the family and the opportunities for having them sharpened. There should always be some sharp kitchen knives.

Keen Edges on Knives.

This brings us to the subject of keeping knives in proper condition. A dull knife is rid of its chief function, which is to cut well. Keeping knives sharp is, therefore, imperative for good housekeeping. This involves having the cutlery ground occasionally, and the frequent use of some sort of a home sharpening implement.

The modern wheel sharpeners are excellent, provided you get a good one that has its several discs of well hardened steel. By drawing the edge of the blade of a knife between the two sets of correctly positioned wheels, the knife will get a keen edge. But do not let this make you remiss about having the knives sharpened on a grindstone, too. One of the reasons why duplicates of types of knives are recommended is that while one set is being ground, the other remains for use.

Doing Our Best.

Doing the best we can is not enough unless that best keeps constantly improving. A child doing its very utmost cannot, in reason, be expected to do the same task as well as an experienced adult. Persons who have taken courses, shall we say in drawing, sculpture, painting, singing, or any of the fine arts, must be dull, indeed, unless their best is better than that of persons who have not had such advantages.

A cook who has studied the culinary branch of homemaking, or who has learned in that great school known as experience, certainly should excel above the little newlywed, whose time previously has been taken up in activity outside the home. Of one thing we may be sure, the latter person will do better the second year than the first. Her first best will be as nothing to her second year best.

An Experience.

One concert pianist whom I know amazed her friends by becoming an expert cook after her marriage.

"Well," she would say, when her friends expressed their appreciation of some delectable dish and their surprise that she had turned her hand so quickly to preparing fancy foods, "I thought if I had brains enough to learn to play the piano, I certainly could learn to cook if I set my mind to that. Even the uneducated can and do cook splendidly. Why shouldn't I?"

Needless to say she was constantly on the alert in her music and in her home. To have the best of tomorrow be ahead of the best of today.

Turning our attention to things other than mundane, none of us should let our best actions and thoughts remain at a standstill. The best way to grow in grace, is to fill our hearts with such kindly feelings towards others that the desire to be censorious, cranky, and disagreeable has no part in our lives.

Plugs Convenient

Economy outlets, or base plugs as they're commonly known, to which you connect your cords for lamps and electrical appliances, provide the simplest way of doing away with unsightly extension cords strung along the floor. These cords tangle with each other, and members of your family are likely to trip over them. The outlets can be added for little cost and they greatly improve the convenience, appearance and economy of your home.

Low Furniture

If furniture is built too close to the floor—less than six inches—it tends to be a dust collector. It is hard to sweep or dust beneath it or to run the vacuum cleaner there. Too many ornate carvings give corners and crevices to furniture, thereby making dusting difficult and tedious. A soft bristle brush is the most efficient tool for dusting carved furniture and makes the task far more simple.

POTATOES FOR BREAKFAST DISH

Welcomed by Many for First Meal on Sunday.

By EDITH M. BARBER

NOT long ago a friend of mine was bewailing the disappearance of the potato from the American breakfast table. "The trouble is," he went on to say, "the potato has never had any advertising." I am not so sure about this latter fact; possibly it was the potato which got the first testimonial advertising when royalty wore the blossoms in order to make it fashionable for the French people to eat the potatoes, a then novel food to them.

While few of us will go back to the meat and potato breakfast which was a daily occurrence a generation or so ago, most of us welcome potatoes warmly when they appear on Sunday at a late breakfast when the two-meal-a-day plan is followed. Beefsteak with potatoes hashed in cream! Of course, nothing could be better. They are just as good with sausage or grilled ham. The other day at a late breakfast party potatoes scalloped with ham were served. Another time there was a combination of sweet potatoes, sliced apples and bacon.

While I like potatoes in practically any form, perhaps baked potatoes are the best, that is to say, if they are properly baked. Perhaps you are thinking at this moment that any one can bake a potato. Of course, any one can light the oven, scrub the potatoes and put them in to bake. There are a few tricks, however. The oven must be hot at first, about 500 degrees Fahrenheit, for the first 15 minutes, and then the heat should be lowered to about 350 degrees Fahrenheit. They will then be well cooked throughout and the skin will be tender. As soon as they are tender, which can be tested by pressing the baked potato with a towel, they must be taken out of the oven and—remember this—broken open. They may then be covered with a towel until you are ready to serve them. They will be dry and sweet; they will not be soggy, as too often we find them.

Plain mashed potatoes, although they sound so simple, are not always at their best. After they are tender they should be put through the ricer, seasoned with butter, salt and pepper and thinned with hot milk or cream. They must then be beaten thoroughly. Do not put them through the ricer again before you serve them. It really is done sometimes, as you probably have discovered. The above method may be used for boiled potatoes or for baked when the contents must be taken out of the shell and then returned. In this case you may like to add a little scraped onion and parsley or some grated cheese.

Potatoes may be either boiled or baked when they are to be used for creaming or frying. They should be cold before they are sliced or diced after they are cooked. Both French and German fried potatoes are prepared from the raw vegetable. For the French fried the fat must be very, very hot, only a few pieces of potato should be put into it at one time, and it should be reheated before a new lot is put into the fat. There are a number of different recipes for the German fried, but from my favorite German cook book comes the one which I am giving you.

And just one more note for the benefit of dieters. Potatoes are three-fourths water.

German Fried Potatoes.

Peel as many potatoes as are needed and cut into very thin slices. In a frying pan put plenty of butter or lard, or try out some fat salt pork. Add the potatoes, about an inch deep, sprinkle with salt and pepper, add a cup of water and cover pan tightly. After 10 minutes, uncover and brown potatoes over a medium fire.

Scalloped Potatoes With Ham.

1 quart sliced raw potatoes
½ pound ham, cut into cubes
Pepper
2 cups milk

Arrange potatoes and ham in layers in a buttered baking dish, sprinkling each layer with pepper. Add the milk and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees F., until potatoes are tender. If necessary, add more milk. Raw ham or leftover cooked ham may be used.

Stuffed Baked Potatoes.

6 large baked potatoes
½ pound grated cheese
½ cup milk
¼ teaspoon paprika
1½ teaspoons salt

Cut potatoes in half lengthwise and scoop out the centers. Put through the ricer. Add cheese to hot milk and beat until smooth. Mix with mashed potatoes, add seasonings and beat until light and creamy. Refill potato shells, return to hot oven, 400 degrees F., and bake until brown.

Potatoes Hashed in Cream.

2 tablespoons butter
2 cups diced potatoes
Salt, pepper
2 cups rich milk

Melt the butter, add potatoes and seasoning and stir over fire until the butter is absorbed. Add the milk and cook slowly, about half an hour. Add more milk if needed.

Sweet Potato With Bacon.

6 sweet potatoes
3 apples
½ pound sliced bacon

Boil the potatoes until soft and place in a greased dripping pan, pare, core and slice the apples and place between the potatoes. Place the strips of bacon across the potatoes and bake in a hot oven until the bacon is crisp and the apples soft.

POULTRY FACTS

WATCH STANDARDS OF COD LIVER OIL

Potency for Rats Does Not Apply to Chickens.

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Any source of vitamin D that is to be included in mixed feeds intended for poultry should be purchased on the basis of its guaranteed potency for chickens instead of rats. The potency of commercial sources of vitamin D is customarily measured by tests made with rats which do not react to the different sources of this vitamin as do chickens.

The poultryman may obtain vitamin D from cod-liver oil, sardine oil, other fish-liver and fish oils, and irradiated products. In the case of cod-liver oil, new standards have been adopted, and if it is to be sold as such it must now contain at least 85 international vitamin D units and at least 600 international vitamin A units per grain. Any cod-liver oil that does not meet these requirements must be labeled "cod-liver oil, not U. S. P." The designation "Poultry U. S. P.," has been used recently, but it is misleading and its use is not official.

Until some satisfactory chicken unit of vitamin D potency has been established, cod-liver oil may be purchased on the basis of the number of international vitamin D units it contains per gram. All other sources of vitamin D should be purchased on the basis of the minimum quantity, expressed as per cent of the feed, required to protect young growing chicks against rickets.

"Although the official method of stating vitamin D potency is to give the number of international units per gram, some carriers of cod-liver oil are still marked with the number of units per ounce, and often the unit meant is not the international unit. The purchaser should remember that all units of vitamin D potency are not equal and that an ounce is more than 28 times as heavy as a gram."

Sour Skim Milk Good Beverage for Chicks

Sour skim milk is an excellent beverage for baby chicks, according to Dr. W. C. Thompson, professor of poultry husbandry at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers university. It increases their appetites and is a readily digestible and highly nutritious food in itself, he says.

The rate of growth is stimulated by feeding sour skim milk to chicks during the first six weeks, and the beverage also acts as a regulator of the birds' digestive systems, Doctor Thompson points out. Commercial poultrymen are using this food in increasing quantity lately because it helps to produce good broilers quickly and aids in getting young pullets properly started.

Fresh milk may easily be made sour by using a small amount of sour milk as a starter and adding fresh milk to it each morning. If this is set in a warm room, the souring process will take place rapidly.

Feed the sour milk in a thickened condition, but first break the clabber by stirring so that the whey as well as the solids will be consumed. Baby chicks may be started on sour milk during their first day in the brooder and need be fed no water during the entire six weeks, provided there is plenty of the milk on hand. This forces all the chicks to get the sour milk consuming habit.

When feeding sour milk to chicks, it is advisable to use earthenware or enamelware containers instead of metal receptacles, as the lactic acid in the sour milk may have a chemical reaction on the metal.

Poultry Cullings

If the turkey is to be dry picked, the work should be begun immediately while the feathers are loosened.

• • •

It costs approximately 80 eggs a year to feed a hen, whether it is a good layer or a poor one.

• • •

Farm flock records show that those who brood early chicks make more profit from their flocks than those who brood late chicks.

• • •

Lighting will help to hasten the moult of old birds, and get them back into laying condition quickly.

• • •

Shatterings of alfalfa (largely leaves and the finest stems) that accumulate under hay drops and in front of the mangers, are excellent feed.

• • •

See that the birds get plenty of sunshine, and do not keep breeders in service too long. The older the birds, after the first year or two, the lower is the quality and fertility of their eggs.

• • •

Geese represent about one-half of one per cent of all poultry raised in this country, reports Oklahoma A. and M. college.

• • •

Considerable loss in breakage of eggs in shipment can be avoided if attention is given to the production of eggs with strong shells.

• • •

New Hampshire Reds have made a very enviable reputation for themselves. It is hardly believable when you hear of the marvelous results many poultry raisers have had.

Lice Bother to Heifers, Calves

Early Attention Is Advised to Save Animals From Losing Weight.

By Fred M. Haig, Associate Professor of Animal Husbandry and Dairying, North Carolina State College—WNU Service.

Cattle lice are a serious handicap to the development of calves and heifers.

When infested with lice, the young animals rub against posts and trees, wearing away their hair and inflaming their skin. Sometimes the calves become thin and weak from loss of weight.

In the early spring dairymen should inspect their calves to see whether they are infested with lice.

The insects are found mostly around the necks and shoulders of the animals, but they also infest other parts of the body.

The first step in eradicating lice is to clean and disinfect the stalls thoroughly. After removing the bedding and sweeping the stalls, disinfect them with a 5 per cent solution of any good coal tar disinfectant.

Allow the stalls to dry, then whitewash the interior. When the whitewash is dry place plenty of straw bedding or other clean material in the stalls.

Meanwhile, apply to the calves a solution of one ounce of sodium fluoride in a gallon of water. Brush it in thoroughly so that it will reach every part of the body and penetrate loose folds of skin.

Tie the animals in a sunny place, protected from drafts, until they are dry. The calves are than ready to be placed back in the newly disinfected stalls and a second treatment will hardly be necessary unless they become infested again from other animals.

Good Plan to Let Garden Spot Rest for One Year

Since home gardens are generally maintained on the same spot year after year, liberal applications of manure should be given each fall and turned under to maintain fertility. When this is done the manure will be rotted by spring and if plowed again in spring this new and rich plant food will be readily available for the vegetable crop. If the manure has not been applied in the fall, then rotted manure can be applied in the spring, or a light dressing of chicken or sheep manure can be given, even after the crops are planted. Twenty-five tons of stable manure to the acre, preferably cow manure, will keep garden soil in good condition, according to a writer in the Missouri Farmer.

Many farmers believe that too much chicken manure has been applied to farm gardens. Of all manures, chicken manure is richest and, lacking in bulk as compared with cow or horse manure mixed with straw, it does not leave the soil in as loose condition as is desirable. Too heavy applications, as every farmer knows, will cause the plants to burn if the weather be dry.

What would do many farm gardens a lot of good would be one year's rest with the plot sowed to red clover. If for one year the garden vegetables could be raised on a different plot of ground, the old plot sown to red clover with the crop plowed under, a vast improvement in richness and looseness of soil would be the result.

Rubber Beats Steel

Rubber tires have scored another victory over steel in tests made by 14 experiment stations and summarized by the United States Department of Agriculture. The score was "96 per cent in favor of low-pressure pneumatic tires over steel tires for wheel tractors of the general-purpose type in the performance of numerous routine draft operations of the average farm under favorable soil conditions." The states ranged from California to Ohio and from Michigan to Texas. The rubber-tired tractors pulled better and saved fuel. They did not perform well, without chains, in mud or wet soil. It was found better to have a pressure of only 16 pounds in rear tires, while 26 pounds worked best for front wheels. Estimates place number of rubber-tired tractors in use in United States at more than a million.—The Country Home.

Fever Caused by Ticks

Until Dr. Theobald Smith discovered the cause of Texas cattle fever in 1888 the annual loss from this disease was $40,000,000 a year. Doctor Smith performed experiments in the Southwest, as an employee of the United States Department of Agriculture, and by means of observing healthy and unhealthy animals kept inclosed pastures under controlled conditions, and by means of vivisection, he was able to find the tick causing the disease, which for 30 years previous to that time had impoverished many cattle raisers in all sections of the world.—Medical Society of the State of New York.

Nodular Disease in Sheep

The embryo of the internal parasite which causes nodular disease in sheep is the cause of nodules inside the intestines. It is difficult if not impossible to give medicine which will kill or remove these nodules without injury to the sheep; therefore medical treatment is not effective. Once badly infested there is little hope of successfully treating the sheep. Prevention by rotation and raising lambs in dry lots off pasture is the only effective measures for controlling this disease.

Oldest Temple-Fort Found by Explorers in the Orient

A prehistoric architect's conception of a combined citadel and temple of worship, antedating by nearly three centuries the earliest biblical reference to temple fortresses, has been uncovered by archeologists at Tepe Gawra, in northern Mesopotamia, it was announced at the University of Pennsylvania. The discovery and excavation of the massive walled "round house," a circular building of sun brick unique among all prehistoric finds, climaxed the seventh season of work at the "Great Mound" 15 miles northeast of Mosul by a joint expedition of the university museum and the American Schools of Oriental Research.

Adlerika gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old, poisonous matter that you would not believe was in your system and that has been causing gas pains, sour stomach, nervousness and headaches for months.

Dr. H. L. Shoub, New York, reports: "In addition to intestinal cleansing, Adlerika greatly reduces bacteria and colon bacilli."

Give your stomach and bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika and see how good you feel. Just one spoonful relieves GAS and chronic constipation. Sold by all druggists and drug departments.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him.

"Neither did I," Bryn said. "I never dreamed of such a thing. But I was curious, I'll admit that. You haven't any curiosity because you haven't got any imagination. If you had, you'd have been hanging around, too. You'd have wanted to look at the man in the case, when he arrived for this wedding to a girl he'd never seen, and then when you saw the man you'd certainly have wanted to get a look at the girl, and when you saw the girl . . ." Bryn paused. Tubby looked at him curiously, but Bryn coughed and went on immediately. "When you saw the girl you would most assuredly have wanted to know how it was all going to come out. She . . . well, she wasn't his type, Tub."

"You're saying just what I've been trying to say," Tubby cried. "Holworthy's been working on your imagination. He knows what you're like. Well, it's succeeded. Everything's gone according to plan. You're roped. Tonight you're going to marry this girl that you've only seen three times, a girl you don't really know a darn thing about, just because she has some kind of cock-and-bull story about having to get married before her twenty-first birthday and the man she's supposed to marry doesn't happen to take her fancy. Of course he wouldn't take her fancy with you around. Certainly he wouldn't. That's what it's all about, you darn idiot. You. James Weldon Shipley Brynildson Third. Ye gods and little fishes, aren't there enough men on the coast who would marry her for this fifty thousand dollars she's supposed to be paying you, without you stepping into it? It's so damned absurd. What are you doing it for? Fifty thousand dollars doesn't mean anything to you! And they've got it all worked out so that there'll be plenty of publicity and trouble when you want a divorce . . . you going up into the Oregon backwoods to live with her for a year. So romantic! And she'll turn out to be a cheap little crook, but she'll be married to you all the same and entitled to a lot of your property when the break comes, and your name as well. Doesn't it sound beautiful?"

"Don't be an ass," Bryn said comfortably. "We went to school with Ted Holworthy. Anyway, I happen to know that this business is on the level, because I've known about the case for years. As a matter of fact, it was I who asked Holworthy about it last year, if you'll remember, which you probably won't. I met the old gentleman himself, Deborah's grandfather, when he was here eight years ago fixing the will up with Ted's father. It was just when I was taking over my property and spending a good deal of time in Holworthy's office. The old gentleman was a most interesting old chap, and we had several long conversations. He was intensely concerned about this will he was making, and very anxious to make sure that he was doing the right thing. The old man put the thing up to me as a hypothetical case and asked me what I thought of it. Being a young fool, I thought it sounded fine."

"So now," Tubby said, eyeing him, "when it doesn't look as if it might be so fine, you feel responsible? Is that it? Is that why you're throwing yourself away like a sack of soft potatoes?"

Bryn sighed. "I do wish you'd go and change your clothes," he said. "You can't be my best man in a white tie and tails, not when I'm wearing a lounge suit. We'd probably have another earthquake."

"And what about Pilar?"

"Pilar?"

"Pilar D'Avillo? What about her?"

"Well, what about her?"

"For two years you've carted her around. She's had a smile for the last 23 months like a mouse in a cheese barrel. Everybody thinks you're going to marry her. She'll go blooey when she hears this. Have you told her anything at all?"

"How could I tell her? I wasn't sure myself until two hours ago, when I telephoned you. I couldn't telephone her, could I? Hello, Pilar, I'm going to marry a girl in a few minutes. And there's no reason why I should. I've never asked her to marry me, or even hinted about it."

"Well, I don't have to tell her, do I?"

"That's a bright idea," Bryn said happily. "Thanks, old man. I'll do the same for you one of these days."

"What'll happen," Tubby said miserably, "is that she'll have me marrying her myself."

"Well, that's all right," Bryn assured him. "You've always wanted to, anyway. Now, on your way, Tubby. Go and get dressed. Burch will bring you your cocktail, and lend you one of his shirts and a collar. You can wear my pants if you're careful not to take a deep breath, but I don't think you'd better try buttoning the coat. All in keeping . . . she'll think you got them second hand."

"Marry Pilar?"

"Certainly. She's just the wife for you. There's the blood of the conquistadores in Pilar. It'll take that to keep you from getting any fatter. Go on. You've only got five minutes."

* * * * * * *

Twenty-three years previously, Anne Whittaker Larned had eloped, on the morning of the day of her wedding to Courtney Graham, and had married a young man, who, had he been a woman, would never have been received in the society in which the Larneds moved. The consequences were disastrous. The young man had no money, but he had expected to have a great deal when the Larneds relented and forgave their only daughter. However, he encountered unexpected difficulties with the daughter herself; for when she discovered why he had married her, she crept away from him, her heart as nearly broken as a physical organ can be broken by human unhappiness, and when her daughter was only a few days old, she died. Fortunately, the young father—who never knew that he was a father—was kicked in a vital spot by a horse, and died before he could cause any more misfortune; thus strengthening the belief of a number of people in the vengeance and justice of God.

The aged and broken grandparents took their daughter's child and also the blame for their daughter's unhappiness. If, they told themselves miserably, they had guarded her well, she would never have met this handsome young scoundrel, and all would have been as they had planned. She would have married Courtney Graham, scion of an old and spotless family, and all her ways would have been ways of pleasantness and all her paths would have been paths of peace.

The Grahams were among the first people of Boston. Nowhere on their escutcheon could be found a blot, and even the erasure marks were so carefully done as to leave no trace. A perfect marriage, it would have been. But their daughter was dead, and their bitter regret was in vain. However, they still had the child, and over the mother's grave they vowed to themselves that nothing should mar this girl's life. They dedicated their remaining years to her. It seemed to them that they must creep out of the world with her, hide her, find for her a sanctuary.

They had sold the historic mansion in Boston, and with their beautiful old household goods, had gone west as far as they could go, out to the Oregon wilderness. There, in the most glorious natural surroundings, they had built a huge stone house, as like the Boston house as possible, and filled it with their treasures. They were miles from the nearest town, and cut off from all easy contact with civilization.

Here the child, Deborah, grew up, with only her grandparents and the servants for her companions. Save for one trip to Boston with her grandmother when she was eight years old, she had scarcely been off her grandfather's land. In the early years, when she was yet a small child, she went infrequently with her grandparents over the rough mountain roads to the little country town, or was perhaps allowed to accompany old Gary, their servant, on a marketing expedition; but as she grew older, and her mother's beauty began to evidence itself in her, she was kept more and more closely at home. There were quite often guests at the great house when Deborah was a child, but they were grave elderly people like her grandparents, so that she grew up completely cut off from companions of her own age and generation. She had, however, a library full of books, and three people entirely devoted to her welfare.

It must be admitted that of the three, Grandfather, Grandmother and Gary, it was Gary who taught her the most interesting things. Grandfather taught her history, and science, and geography, and political economy; if he was a little vague in places it was because there are matters, of course, with which a woman need not sully her pure mind. Grandmother taught her needlework, and a number of things that made them both blush and over which they skipped as hastily as possible. But Gary—Gary told her stories of people.

"Now you'll never believe it," he would begin, "but it's a fact. I saw it with my own eyes."

"Saw what, Gary darling?" Deborah would ask delightedly, curling up her feet underneath her on the table. "What did you see with your very own eyes?"

"It was once when I was in New York," he would begin. "I was walking down Fifth avenue one day . . . that's a very interesting street, Miss Deborah, the most interesting street in the world, I've been told . . . and right in front of me there was a young lady walking along, all dressed up in a picture hat and feather boa two yards long, and she was crying. Crying fit to kill, if you can imagine it. . . ."

Yes, there was Gary. Grandfather and Grandmother kept the iron gates leading to the world locked and barred, but Gary lifted the shutters of a thousand little windows, magic casements, all of them, opening on the foam of perilous seas.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Champion of the Oil Fields

ASK any Texas or Oklahoma oil-driller who's the best in his business and he's pretty certain to answer "Why, Kemp Morgan, of course!"

Ask him why and he will tell you it's because Kemp had more unusual experiences than any other seeker after "black gold" ever did.

For instance there was the time Kemp lost his best drill. He was working in soft ground but he noticed that the drill kept going slower and slower the farther it went down. Pretty soon it stopped completely. When Kemp tried to pull it out, it was stuck fast. Come to find out that he had hit an alum mine and the hole had shrunk up around the drill so tight that even Kemp couldn't budge it.

Then there was the time a Texas "norther" swooped down on Kemp's rig. But it didn't stop him—no sirree! He just kept on drilling, and brought in a 22-inch gusher. It was so cold that the oil froze as it spurted upward so there was a solid column of frigid oil. Kemp just took out his knife, hacked it off in three-foot lengths and shipped it to the refinery on flat cars.

That was in Texas but Kemp had a funny experience once in Oklahoma. He drilled a well so deep that it tapped a rubber mine 'way down in Brazil. She began to gush pure rubber, so Kemp just blew his hot breath on it to make it solid, cut it off in 11-foot lengths and shipped it to that place in Ohio where they make solid tires for trucks.

When the average driller brings in a "duster," he moves his rig away from there pronto. But not Kemp Morgan! He knew what a tough time the Kansas farmers had digging postholes in the summer when the ground was baked hard. So whenever he'd strike a dry hole, he'd just take his two hands, pull it up four feet and two inches at a time and saw it off. Then he'd ship a carload of these lengths across the state line where they always found a market.

Private Life of Jonah

IT WASN'T a whale which swallowed Jonah, theorizes Stanley Suchwalko, it was a big-mouthed fish in northern Michigan. His friend, Laddie Hornik, captured the monster in 1930.

Laddie inspected the fish, which had laid down its life while being hooked, gaffed and beaten over the head with a pair of oars, and couldn't decide what to do with it. The size seemed to destroy the fish's commercial value and imagine Laddie's surprise, says Stanley, when the first stranger to arrive bid a fabulous price for the fish's scales.

Laddie yelled "Sold!" Then he recovered his poise, sheared off the scales, counted the money and watched the stranger bear the scales away.

"What'll you do with 'em?" asked Laddie.

"I'm a spade manufacturer from Moline, Ill.," replied the buyer. "I've got material here for 6,400 spades of the best chilled steel."

Buyer after buyer paid staggering prices for different parts of the fish and Laddie, says Stanley, didn't get wise until a tremendous price was bid and accepted for the fish's stomach.

The stomach buyer immediately slit open the fish's belly and revealed the golden throne upon which Jonah had been seated during his long captivity.

"It's cheap at half the price," stated the buyer with pardonable satisfaction as he brushed a stray fin from his precious purchase.

The Despondent Grasshoppers

A SEASONED maxim of the copybooks is that frequently a real cry does a person good. Leonard Bailer, once a Nebraska farmer, is sure of it.

Rain washed away the railroads around his Nebraska lands; the drouth hit him squarely; then the dust storms killed every living thing and his land was dry as the inside of a grain bin. At this moment, the grasshoppers arrived by millions and settled on his farms.

Wasn't a thing for the 'hoppers to eat but they were too tired to move on and Leonard almost lost hope. As a last gesture, however he rushed out among the despondent grasshoppers, sitting there in the dust, and planted several sets of the strongest and hardiest onions he could buy.

To his surprise the onions matured quickly. The moment their bulbs appeared above ground the grasshoppers pounced on them, ate ravenously and burst into tears.

"And that," Leonard recalls proudly, "is how my farms were saved. The land was drenched by the tears of the grasshoppers and as soon as they had drowned themselves I was able, of course, to raise a normal crop."

Theory Pre-Dates Pasteur

The germ theory of disease is much older than the discoveries of Louis Pasteur, with whose name it is associated because he was the first to make practical use of it, according to the Medical society of the state of New York. He produced serums for anthrax, rabies and other diseases. But before Pasteur was born, a Seventeenth century German scholar named Athanasius Kircher noted that flies visit the sick and infect the well by contaminating their food.

TWENTY TWO GRADUATE FROM SPENCER TWP. SCHOOL

The commencement exercises were held in the Spencerville Community Hall last Friday night culminated a week of school activity which began the preceding Saturday night when the Juniors entertained the Seniors at a reception held at the Temple Cafe in Auburn. Music for the reception was furnished by the Rythm Ramblers whose personnel included William Allen, Loren Dale Laub, Merle Coburn and William Erick.

The welcome from the Juniors was given by Doris Furnish and the Senior response by Fred Steward. The class prophecy was read by Dick Osborn and the will by Carol Gerig. Toasts followed by Harold Kagey and Alice Hart.

On Sunday night Rev. Ferster gave the baccalaureate sermon at the Lutheran Church. Special music was given by the Senior girls who sang "Take My Hand" and "The Prayer Perfect."

Commencement followed the closing of school on Friday. The community hall was filled to capacity, some guests even having to stand. The stage was well decorated with blooming plants and flowers, beyond and above which the class motto, "Labor Conquers All" done in class colors of blue and siver.

The Senior girls were dressed in white and wore corsages of blue violets which happened to be the class flower. Mrs. Ruder, the music teacher, played the march at the beginning of the services. Rev. Seuter gave the invocation and Margaret Walter followed with the salutatorian address. The class sang their class song and Fred Steward gave the valedictorian address immediately afterward.

Rev. Rupnow, of Fort Wayne, delivered the commencement address in his own, easy style of speaking. His reputation as a speaker known for miles around has been gained by his marvelous power of holding the interest of his audience while presenting vitally interesting philosophy. He spoke in part of the place that education takes in the lives of our young people today; and yet, how necessary it is that education should be followed by initiative and the will to progress beyond the limits of local horizons. He illustrated with the character Adolph Hitler, over in Germany, who had no more education than did the graduating class but possessed an inner power which carried him forward in his desire to reach the top.

"At a recent election held in Germany, ninety per cent of the people voted for him. If Gabriel were to come down to earth and run for president even he would never get that many votes," he said.

The graduating class was composed of Charles Agler, Alice Baker, George Blondell, Marvella Brattain, Lee Chapman, Audrey Farver, Josephine Fisher, Rosemond Furnish, Carol Gerig, Audra Hook, James Kelley, Richard Kimes, Herman Lemper, Kenneth Means, Warren Rectenwall, Anna Ryan, Roy Sponhower, Fred Steward, William Steward, Dorothy Varner, Agnes Walker, and Margaret Walter. Everett Paschen was principal of the High School this year.

The class is to be congratulated in having a valedictorial and a salutatorian who attained the highest average ever gained by a member of a class graduating from Spencerville High School. Miss Walter, the salutatorian, will probably complete her education at the International Business College in Fort Wayne. Mr. Steward shall this fall enroll in a college or university, the choice having not yet been made. Warren Rectenwall also considers entering college this fall. Other class men have not decided on a vocation.

The plan is to go into effect May 1.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1936 NUMBER 19

INDIANA SYNOD AT EVANSVILLE

The 88th annual convention of the Indiana Synod of the United Lutheran Church in America will be held in St. Mark's Lutheran Church of Evansville, Indiana, the Rev. L. T. Riley, pastor. Eighty five pastors representing 107 congregations, and some fifty lay delegates are expected to be in attendance. The sessions will open on Monday evening, May 11th, with the service of the Holy Communion, at which time the Rev. H. E. Turney, S. T. M., president of the Synod, and pastor of the First Lutheran Church of Columbus, Indiana, will deliver the opening sermon on the subject, "The Challenge of the Gospel."

Outstanding upon the program of synod this year will be the appearance of two of the outstanding clergymen of the United Lutheran Church. On Tuesday evening at a Fellowship Banquet and Synodical Mass Rally, the Rev. H. E. Badger, D. D., president of the Pittsburg Synod, one of the largest synods of the United Lutheran Church, and vice president of the Board of Education, will deliver the address. Dr. Badger is also a leader in the work of the church at large. On Wednesday evening at a special service the address will be given by the Rev. W. H. Greever, D. D., secretary of the United Lutheran Church, and formerly on the faculty of the Southern Theological Seminary of Columbia, South Carolina. Dr. Greever will speak on the theme "Deepening the Spiritual Life."

Among the outstanding men of the church who will address the convention during the sessions will be the Rev. R. E. Tulloss, Ph. D., president of Wittenberg College at Springfield, Ohio, the Rev. L. H. Larimer, D. D., president of Hamma Divinity School at Springfield, Ohio, and the Rev. L. Franklin Gruber, D. D., president of the Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary, and prominent author and lecturer.

Mr. Torrey H. Walker, of Philadelphia, secretary of the Department of Church Extension and Finance, and Mr. Harry Hodger, of Philadelphia, executive secretary of the Board of Ministerial Pensions, will also be present and address the convention.

Among the items of business coming before the convention will be one of great interest and concern, that of deciding upon the matter of a full time salaried president for the Synod. A special commission appointed to study this matter will present a recommendation calling for the establishment of such an office with the close of the 1936 convention.

Rev. C. J. Ferster, a member of the Stewardship Committee, and Mr. Harry Hush, lay delegate representing the local churches will attend the convention.

SCHOOL YEAR ENDS

The local high school commencement exercises were attended by the largest number of people we have ever seen in the local school auditorium. Rev. Ferster opened the program with an invocation. During the program Helen Tustison and Ersa Reidenbach gave three very pleasing vocal duets. Eileen Gaff extended the welcome of the class to parents and friends. Violet Brunson gave the class history. The valedictory was given by Helen Washler.

Trustee A. W. Trostel introduced the class speaker, Rev. Basil Holt, who pleased everyone with his address on "Making a Success in Life." The diplomas were presented by Superintendent C. F. Stallman in an excellent talk in which he explained the purposes of modern education and congratulated the class on its attainment. Rev. Ferster pronounced the benediction.

School Awards

The following pupils received certificates of award for perfect attendance during the school year: Seniors— Violet Brunson, Harriett Keller, Bonnie Weikel; Juniors— Leonard Curie, Berneice Madden, Anna Richards, Devere Woodcox; Sophomores, Eloise Coburn, Pauline Donley, Alta Inow, Delta Inlow, Ruby Madden, Robert Schondelmayer, Blanche Strong, Florine Swander, Garnet Washler, Eva Young; Freshmen— Hilma Bleeks, Gwenevere Jenkins, Dorothy Jetmore; Eighth grade— Norman Ayers, Marcia Wade, Maxine Woodcox; Seventh grade— Ruth Donley, Jack Goodwin, and Harold Inlow.

School medals were awarded as follows on last Friday morning in the closing session of school for the year: Highest average scholarship, Helen Washler of the seniors and Ersa Reidenbach of the juniors; best citizenship and scholarship grades in sophomore year Iris Wilmot and Ivan Brown; for loyal participation in school activities Eileen Gaff, senior, and Ersa Reidenback, junior; participation and attainment in school athletics, Lonard Curie, junior, and Charles Thornton, senior.

Letters Awarded

Five senior boys were awarded letters for participation in basket ball this year by the high school athletic association. These boys were Frank Richmond, Edward Sechler, Charles Thornton, Richard Wiers, and Robert Wyatt.

Commercial Department Awards

Pins for three stages of achievement in typing were awarded on last Friday. These were presented to groups who had attained speeds of sixty, fifty or forty words a minute letter. Seventeen of these pins were presented.

FARM BUREAU ATTENDANCE SMALL

Because of the farmers being busy, the Bureau attendance was small Tuesday night, but the program was full of its usual farmer interest. Pictures by County Agent Myers closed the evening's program.

John R. Leighty talked on DeKalb County Fair explaining the new corporation and why it was necessary to insure the continuation of the fair.

The rumor that the Chamber of Commerce had made money, was disproved by the speaker when he stated that the merchants of Auburn contributed from $1,100 to $1,600 a year to the Chamber, who guaranteed the fair. Since the membership of the Chamber is half rural, and the loss of the rental from the postoffice, it was figured that the dues would hardly keep up the expenses of the Chamber each year, the fair organization came into existance.

Under the former arrangements, no appropriation of money could be made for fair work by the commissioners, as the law sets out that it can only appropriate public money to an organization arranged specifically for this work. $500 for premiums has been appropriated and the 50 cents yearly dues will possibly add a like sum and this will give the exhibitors some financial returns for their efforts. No membership is subject to any further financial responsibility, Mr. Leighty said.

Larry Brandon gave a short book review on money creators.

Mr. CountYourMoney, (Harvey Hull,) Piano Solo, (and the gong)

Billy Hercules, a Cowboy, Reading.

Another telegram from Hurni's Store and Goldsmith's Store pledging to sell 1,000 pounds of Bursley's Coffees this week, was received too late for the broadcast. Of course, the honor city that evening was S. Joe and his tribute was as follows:

"Tonight we honor the town of St. Joe, with a population of some 407, located on the banks of St. Joe River, in the well known St. Joe Valley. Out of the first nine families who settled in DeKalb County, seven of them were in Concord Twp. The town was named Blair after one of these families. In later years the name was changed to St. Joe, and the town was incorporated.

"Our honor city can be proud of the fact that they have three good churches, a consolidated school, and two large fruit orchards. In recent years quite a trucking industry has developed, apples, melons, berries, pickles, potatoes and other produce, being shipped to all parts of the country, and the St. Joe Valley is widely gaining notoriety for its wonderful produce. St. Joe may boast of its many business places, and we are proud to say that our Alumni is well represented there, Yeiser's Filling Station, Kinsey's Hardware, Associate Editor of the St. Joe News, Curie's Hardware, Sheffer's Restaurant, Kessler Basket Co., and Sechler's St. Joe Valley Pickle Co. St. Joe is a place of scenic beauty, and I'll challenge you to find a place that can equal it."

This broadcast was made possible through the courtesy of G. E. Bursley & Co., makers of Little Elf, High Grade and Burco dated Coffees.

After the Amateur hour, a get-acquainted circle was formed, and then an informal lunch was served, which consisted of chicken sandwiches, pickles, home-made ice cream, cake and coffee.

The menu committee was Agnes Monroe, Esther Bowman, Dorothea Kessler and Margarette Wisler. The program committee was Grace Dilley, Clark Scholes, and Doris Yeiser. The officers this year were: Lucille Curie, president; Earl Kinsey, vice president; Malcolm Woodcox, secretary, and Reign Schondelmayer, treasurer.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1936 NUMBER 19

INDIANA SYNOD AT EVANSVILLE

The 88th annual convention of the Indiana Synod of the United Lutheran Church in America will be held in St. Mark's Lutheran Church of Evansville, Indiana, the Rev. L. T. Riley, pastor. Eighty five pastors representing 107 congregations, and some fifty lay delegates are expected to be in attendance. The sessions will open on Monday evening, May 11th, with the service of the Holy Communion, at which time the Rev. H. E. Turney, S. T. M., president of the Synod, and pastor of the First Lutheran Church of Columbus, Indiana, will deliver the opening sermon on the subject, "The Challenge of the Gospel."

Outstanding upon the program of synod this year will be the appearance of two of the outstanding clergymen of the United Lutheran Church. On Tuesday evening at a Fellowship Banquet and Synodical Mass Rally, the Rev. H. E. Badger, D. D., president of the Pittsburg Synod, one of the largest synods of the United Lutheran Church, and vice president of the Board of Education, will deliver the address. Dr. Badger is also a leader in the work of the church at large. On Wednesday evening at a special service the address will be given by the Rev. W. H. Greever, D. D., secretary of the United Lutheran Church, and formerly on the faculty of the Southern Theological Seminary of Columbia, South Carolina. Dr. Grevter will speak on the theme "Deepening the Spiritual Life."

Among the outstanding men of the church who will address the convention during the sessions will be the Rev. R. E. Tullos, Ph. D., president of Wittenberg College at Springfield, Ohio, the Rev. L. H. Larimer, D. D., president of Hamma Divinity School at Springfield, Ohio, and the Rev. L. Franklin Gruber, D. D., president of the Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary, and prominent author and lecturer.

Mr. Torrey H. Walker, of Philadelphia, secretary of the Department of Church Extension and Finance, and Mr. Harry Hodger, of Philadelphia, executive secretary of the Board of Ministerial Pensions, will also be present and address the convention.

Among the items of business coming before the convention will be one of great interest and concern, that of deciding upon the matter of a full time salaried president for the Synod. A special commission appointed to study this matter will present a recommendation calling for the establishment of such an office with the close of the 1936 convention.

Rev. C. J. Ferster, a member of the Stewardship Committee, and Mr. Harry Hush, lay delegate representing the local churches will attend the convention.

SCHOOL YEAR ENDS

The local high school commencement exercises were attended by the largest number of people we have ever seen in the local school auditorium. Rev. Ferster opened the program with an invocation. During the program Helen Tustison and Ersa Reidenbach gave three very pleasing vocal duets. Eileen Gaff extended the welcome of the class to parents and friends. Violet Brunson gave the class history. The valedictory was given by Helen Washler.

Trustee A. W. Trostel introduced the class speaker, Rev. Basil Holt, who pleased everyone with his address on "Making a Success in Life." The diplomas were presented by Superintendent C. F. Stallman in an excellent talk in which he explained the purposes of modern education and congratulated the class on its attainment. Rev. Ferster pronounced the benediction.

School Awards

The following pupils received certificates of award for perfect attendance during the school year: Seniors — Violet Brunson, Harriett Keller, Bonnie Weikel; Juniors— Leonard Curie, Berneice Madden, Anna Richards, Devere Woodcox; Sophomores, Eloise Coburn, Pauline Donley, Alta Inow, Delta Inlow, Ruby Madden, Robert Schondelmayer, Blanche Strong, Florine Swander, Garnet Washler, Eva Young; Freshmen—Hilma Bleeks, Gwenevere Jenkins, Dorothy Jetmore; Eighth grade—Norman Ayers, Marcia Wade, Maxine Woodcox; Seventh grade-Ruth Donley, Jack Goodwin, and Harold Inlow.

School medals were awarded as follows on last Friday morning in the closing session of school for the year: Highest average scholarship, Helen Washler of the seniors and Ersa Reidenbach of the juniors; best citizenship and scholarship grades in sophomore year Iris Wilmot and Ivan Brown; for loyal participation in school activities Eileen Gaff, senior, and Ersa Reidenback, junior; participation and attainment in school athletics, Lonard Curie, junior, and Charles Thornton, senior.

Letters Awarded

Five senior boys were awarded letters for participation in basket ball this year by the high school athletic association. These boys were Frank Richmond, Edward Sechler, Charles Thornton, Richard Wiers, and Robert Wyatt.

Commercial Department Awards

Pins for three stages of achievement in typing were awarded on last Friday. These were presented to groups who had attained speeds of sixty, fifty or forty words a minute letter. Seventeen of these pins were presented.

FARM BUREAU ATTENDANCE SMALL

Because of the farmers being busy, the Bureau attendance was small Tuesday night, but the program was full of its usual farmer interest. Pictures by County Agent Myers closed the evening's program.

John R. Leighty talked on DeKalb County Fair explaining the new corporation and why it was necessary to insure the continuation of the fair.

The rumor that the Chamber of Commerce had made money, was disproved by the speaker when he stated that the merchants of Auburn contributed from $1,100 to $1,600 a year to the Chamber, who guaranteed the fair. Since the membership of the Chamber is half rural, and the loss of the rental from the postoffice, it was figured that the dues would hardly keep up the expenses of the Chamber each year, the fair organization came into existance.

Under the former arrangements, no appropriation of money could be made for fair work by the commissioners, as the law sets out that it can only appropriate public money to an organization arranged specifically for this work. $500 for premiums has been appropriated and the 50 cents yearly dues will possibly add a like sum and this will give the exhibitors some financial returns for their efforts. No membership is subject to any further financial responsibility, Mr. Leighty said.

Larry Brandon gave a short book review on money creators.

Mr. and Mrs. G. D. Goodwin, of South Bend, were Tuesday dinner guests of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Goodwin.

Just a remembrance on Mother's Day in the form of a beautiful folder, would be appreciated. See them at News office.

Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Graber, of Ardian, Mich., spent the week end here with the latter's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harley Like.

Defiance reports a dozen new homes to be built this summer, factory expansion, and besides much repairing to be done.

Wm. Strouse, of Adrian, Mich., spent from Saturday until Tuesday here the guest of his children. He is looking fine and likes Adrian.

Lester Pugsley is driving a different truck for his drilling outfit, all enclosed and it sure is a nice improvement and one that he will appreciate, especially in b a d weather.

The back water from the river has made carp in evidence in many places, and as soon as the water begins to recede the boys will have great sport catching the marooned fish.

Harry Shuff has purchased the Lysher property and he moved Tuesday. George Tustison and family moved to near Spencerville, occupying the home at the fox ranch, on the old Silberg farm.

M. E. Storer reported that in wandering along the river Sunday afternoon, he saw 5 baby red foxes playing about their den in the sun. Looks like there will be plenty for the fox drive next fall.

When a person volunteers this satisfaction, that really means something. Only last week, Elmer Inlow came in to our office and said, "Say, I wanted to tell you before this, of my satisfaction of the use of your classified column. It is really the one way to sell anything. I still have people answering this ad after it had been discontinued, and just a little later I expect to use it again."

Candidates at the primary election Tuesday now must file their expense accounts with the county clerk in compliance with the Indiana corrupt practices act. Those affected are all candidates excepting for those offices that pay less than $100 a year. The penalty for failure to comply with the statute is severe, being a fine of $300 to $2,000, or imprisonment of not more than a year, or both. Misstatements are held under the law of perjury. The reports must be made within thirty days after the primary.

Early Tuesday morning, Chas. Koch, drove to town to get his mail, really before the office was open. He walked about gassing with the fellows on the street, until he forgot what he came to town for. Shortly he said, "guess I better go home, I am looking for a fellow to come any time to buy a team." He hurriedly walked home and in a short time came back to town, without a coat on, all out of wind, he jumped into his Model T and drove off at his usual lightning speed, and he has not been seen on the street since. That, we call, a case of pure forgetfulness.

Don't forget to phone your items to The News. Call No. 45.

Mr. and Mrs. Philip Carper were in town Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Harry Reas and daughter called on St. Joe friends Wednesday afternoon.

Charles Wiers, uncle to Rolla Wiers, of this place, was buried at Hicksville Wednesday afternoon.

A relief operator is taking the place of John Faulkner at HK Tower, for a few days, the latter having gone to Kimmell.

The planting of shrubbery was resumed at the Lutheran Church Wednesday. which adds greatly to the appearance of the church corner.

Bathing in the gravel pit opened Tuesday, when Morris and Franklin Shuff claimed first place for this spring. The water was chilly but wet.

Joe Hull spent Sunday at Sherwood, making the trip with Glen Wineland, who makes the Sherwood and St. Joe towers, half time each week. He spent the forenoon with Ed VanTroy, a B. & O. camp car cook and in the Sam Openlander home in the afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Wineland and son, Walter, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Dorsey and daughter, Jane, Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Ridgway and daughter, Jean, and son, Kenneth, Mr. and Mrs. Glen Freeburn and sons, Richard, Junior and Charles, Mrs. Maurice Hollabaugh and daughter. Marjory, of Spencerville, Ethelmae Freeburn, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Baker and sons, Robert Jerry and Bruce and Virgil Dorsey, of Fort Wayne, Mr. and Mrs. Donald McCann, gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Wineland Sunday to help celebrate the 70th birthday anniversary of Mr. Wineland.

An order was entered in the DeKalb circuit court Friday re-appointing Will Franks, of Garrett, and Cas. A. Dohner as members of the county board of review. This will be Mr. Franks' twenty-second year on the board and the thirteenth for Mr. Dohner. The former is a democrat and the latter a republican. County Assessor Chas. E. Miser, County Auditor Frank E. Lyon and County Treasurer Claude P. Fitch are ex-officio members, with Mr. Miser the chairman. The board will be in session from June 1 to June 30. Its duties chiefly are to review the work of the local assessors and allow mortgage exemptions. Taxpayers may appeal to the board from assessments made by the local assessors.

The Liberty Bell Rings Again

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Recently the Liberty Bell was "rung" again in Philadelphia.

At its guarded shrine in Independence Hall the famous relic was tapped with a rubber mallet and its deep tones were broadcast into homes throughout America and many parts of Europe.

On this occasion the Bell was sounded in the cause of peace. To the people of America and other lands it carried the message of our desire to live honorably in amity with all nations. But there are other messages which the Bell that has made glorious history could carry throughout the world.

It could remind us at home of the courage and strength and passionate desire for personal liberty on which our fathers founded and developed this nation.

It could carry to the regimented millions of Eastern Europe a reminder that it was in devotion to those principles that America attained a greater measure of well-being and happiness for all its people than any nation on earth.

It could recall to the autocrats and the people of central Europe the glorious history of a nation which wrote tolerance and freedom of religion into its fundamental law, and has devoted itself to those principles through 150 years of liberty.

It could remind the men and women of southern Europe that peace and happiness find their surest resting place where the people, not a dictator, rule the land.

Those are some of the principles for which the Liberty Bell first rang a century and a half ago. If today it can strengthen those principles, not only at home but abroad, it will have performed another great service to mankind.

FARLEY AND HOGG ARE GIVEN LARGE VOTE

Auburn Congressman and Former Republican Representative Overwhelming Favorites in Vote at Primary Election

David Hogg, republican of Fort Wayne, will oppose James I. Farley, democratic incumbent, of Auburn, in the contest for congressman from the fourth district in the election next November as the result of sweeping victories in Tuesday's primary election.

Mr. Hogg, who formerly represented the fourth district in congress, and Mr. Farley, his successor, were overwhelming favorites of their respective parties. Both rolled up wide pluralities in each of the eight counties comprising the district, including Allen, Adams, DeKalb, LaGrange, Noble, Steuben, Wells and Whitley.

Mr. Hogg was opposed by Howard S. Grimm of Auburn, and Fred T. Robinson, of Fort Wayne, who ran in that order. Congressman Farley's opponents were Judge Clarence R. McNabb of Fort Wayne, judge of the Allen circuit court, and Thomas P. Riddle, of Clear Lake, also listed in the order of total number of votes received.

Mr. Hogg ran an easier race than Mr. Farley. Hogg's margin over Mr. Grimm was 12,639, whereas Farley was given a plurality of 6,559 over Judge McNabb.

Complete unofficial returns from the district gave Mr. Hogg a total of 17,741 ballots; Mr. Grimm, 5,102, and Mr. Robinson, 1,102.

Congressman Farley's grand total of 18,339 was 598 higher than Mr. Hogg's. Mr. Farley's opponents polled the following number of votes: Judge McNabb, 11,780; Mr. Riddle, 1,741.

In a division of the district, however, honors were even. Mr. Hogg ran ahead of his November opponent in LaGrange, Noble, Steuben and Whitley counties. The republican nominee's vote was lighter than Mr. Farley's in Allen, Adams, DeKalb and Wells counties.

Both successful candidates polled their heaviest vote in Allen county where Mr. Hogg's total was 7,129 as compared to Congressman Farley's 8,470. Outside of Allen county, Noble county gave Hogg his biggest total, 2,461.

Farley showed greatest strength in Wells county, with the exception of Allen county. In Wells county the congressman polled 2,460 ballots.

Congressman Farley's decisive victory over Judge McNabb is regarded by some observers as indicative of the sentiment in favor of the Roosevelt administration, which Mr. Farley supported. Before the primary results were known, some close followers of the political trend in the fourth district expressed an opinion that Judge McNabb might take the nomination from his more distinguished opponent. Mr. Riddle had been figured to run third.

Supporters of Mr. Hogg's candidacy had not anticipated any serious opposition from the ex-congressman's opponents.

MORE PLANS MADE FOR FREE FALL FAIR

Largest Exhibits in History of DeKalb County Expected This Year by Department Superintendents

There was a one hundred per cent attendance Tuesday night of department heads of the DeKalb County Free Fall Fair association in the Auburn Chamber of Commerce. There was a lot of enthusiasm and after the regular business was attended to those who will have charge of the different departments remained some time to talk fair.

Those in attendance were Albert Yoder, general superintendent of the livestock department; M. E. Leighty, superintendent of the horse section; George Hart, superintendent of cattle; A. J. Moore, sheep; Ralph Barteis, swine; R. A. Gerig, poultry and pet stock; Ferman Hilkey, rabbits; Roy Provines, grains and seeds; Ora Crooks, vegetables; E. W. Miller, fruits; Mrs. Frank Schuster, domestic arts; Mrs. Etta Provines, culinary and Carl F. Stallman, education.

There seemed to be a general opinion among the department superintendents that the fair association furnish feed and bedding for livestock this year instead of the exhibitors. Mr. Yoder was named superintendent of forage and instructed to get prices for feed and bedding and submit them to the board of directors.

It was also suggested that there be a dairy day at the fair. Mr. Hart will call on cattlemen and work up a show for this particular attraction.

The horse department is considering additional premiums besides those to be given by the fair association. A mare and colt will be purchased by the horsemen, valued at $400, and tickets will be sold. Out of the proceeds $100 will be set aside for this year's horse pulling contest. Fifty dollars will be given for the heavy and $50 for light pulling horses in addition to cash premiums to be given by the fair association. The balance of the money derived from the sale of tickets will go into a special fund to be used next year.

George Hart mailed one hundred questionnaires to cattlemen in order to get their opinions about exhibiting at the fair and he received ninety favorable answers. A person of national prominence will judge the cattle this year. An addition of ten Guernsey cattle is in prospect for the 4-H club.

Exhibitors in the swine department will give extra prizes of a weanling pig, a Duroc, Poland-China and Chester White hog in addition to the cash premiums to be given by the fair association.

Carl Stallman, county superintendent of schools, announced that he is planning a spelling contest this year as an added attraction to the fair and H. E. Hart, president of the fair association is already receiving inquiries as to whether or not another public wedding will be held. He has one application for this particular feature.

Additional tentage will be required for the various exhibits, according to predictions made at the meeting.

The membership drive is going over in a big way. One thousand additional membership tickets were ordered on Wednesday. Fifteen hundred tickets are out in the hands of solicitors or members who have signed up at 50 cents each.

Bare $1,000,000 AAA Payments

Wallace Admits Big Checks to Sugar Firms, But Withholds Names.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The United States government paid two sugar firms more than one million dollars each on AAA contracts for not raising sugar cane, Henry A. Wallace, secretary of agriculture, revealed in a letter to Senator Ellison D. Smith of South Carolina.

Secretary Wallace made the admissions after several days of dodging Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg's (Mich.) demands that all AAA payments of more than $10,000 be made public. With Sen. Vandenberg's resolution unanimously reported out of the senate committee on agriculture, Wallace submitted a list of such payments, but withheld names.

Florida Payment Tops Million.

Wallace disclosed that one Florida sugar cane producing corporation had been paid $1,067,665 for cutting cane acreage, while a Hawaiian firm will be paid $1,022,037. A Puerto Rican concern benefited to the extent of $961,064.

The average corn-hog benefit payment in Iowa was $400, but one California hog farm was paid $150,000, Wallace said. Sen. Vandenberg had charged that there had been one corn-hog payment of $219,825.

Although the average Kansas wheat contract was approximately $800, another California farming corporation received $29,898, with the landlord getting $5,370 and the tenant $23,528.

One $84,000 Cotton Payment.

The average cotton contract was less than $1,500, but Wallace said payments of $84,000 had been made jointly to an Arkansas company and the Federal Farm Credit administration.

Rice and tobacco farms came in for their share of the larger windfalls from Uncle Sam for not raising the products they are in business to raise. A Florida tobacco concern got $41,454, while a Louisiana rice grower was paid $59,285. Nineteen rice growers received payments of more than $25,000 each last year.

Of special interest was the third largest cotton benefit payment. It went to Oscar Johnston, manager of the Federal Cotton Pool and for nearly three years associated with the AAA, and amounted to $54,200.

Secretary Wallace admitted that 28 Puerto Rican producers had received payments of more than $10,000, with prospects that their total benefits would be several times that amount. Sugar payments of more than $10,000 each went to 25 beet producers in California and Colorado; 78 cane producers in Louisiana and 39 in Hawaii. Even one peanut grower was paid $3,000.

THE CRACKER BARREL

The housewife, who paid the processing taxes in higher food prices, will be glad to learn that she was contributing to a million-dollar AAA benefit for a Florida sugar planter.

Someone delving into the list of big contributors to the last Democratic campaign suggests that while Roosevelt was driving the "money changers" from the temple, Farley, cup in hand, stood at the entrance begging shekels from the fleeing evil-doers.

New Deal Still Blows $2 for $1

Deficit Looms Bigger Than Ever; Civil Service Is Put on Skids.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Having entered its fourth year of administration March 4, President Roosevelt's New Deal is still spending two dollars for every dollar it takes in. Federal receipts for the 1936 fiscal year to Feb. 29 were $2,348,281,700, while expenditures stood at $4,758,686,381.

This two-for-one spending progresses despite the fact that the President said, in his first annual budget message, that the nation should plan for a balanced budget—which in simple terms means spending no more money than you take in—during the "third year of recovery," which is the 1936 fiscal year.

Now all indications are that the 1936 deficit will be surpassed by the deficit in the 1937 budget, which has been estimated to be more than $4,000,000,000.

New Deal Spends 19 Billion.

Since he was inaugurated on March 4, 1933, the President has spent $19,000,000,000, of which $10,000,000,000 was for purposes other than the ordinary running expenses of the government. A further expenditure of more than $5,000,000,000 is provided for.

Most of the spending outside ordinary expenditures was for the purpose of "priming the pump," pouring Federal money out of the taxpayer's pocket on the theory that business, once stimulated by the artificial purchasing power created, would "pick up" of its own accord and put the idle millions back to work. After three years, with money still rolling out of the treasury in billions for relief and "made work" (boondoggling), the American Federation of Labor, through its president, William Green, estimates that at the end of January there were still 12,626,000 workers unemployed. The increase in unemployment of 1,229,000 from December to January was the largest such increase in five years.

As three years of the New Deal came to an end the National debt had reached a total of about $32,000,000,000, a new high for all time. And an excellent prospect for the near future was a debt of 35 to 40 billions of dollars. This would be a debt of $1,100 to $1,200 for every family in the United States, a prior lien on everything each family earns and a first mortgage on everything it owns.

Fifty Bureaus Created.

In its efforts to spend its way back into national prosperity, the New Deal has in three years introduced novel and contradictory methods. It has spent $8,000,000,000 for relief. It has set up fifty new agencies (mostly alphabetical bureaus) which have created hundreds of thousands of "administrative" laws—rules of executive order in which the executive branch of the government is both judge and jury, may fine or imprison the citizen without his recourse to the courts, and may tell him what to do with his property. In the operation of these bureaus, the New Deal has added 250,000 full time federal employees, less than 1 in 100 of them being required to pass civil service examinations. The civil service in three years has declined from 81 per cent of all federal employees to 57 per cent.

Three years have seen the crop curtailment program of AAA, combined with the drouth and New Deal free trade policies, produce the enigmatic condition of imports of foreign farm products stealing the internal market away from the American farmer at a rapidly increasing rate. Imports of grains, bacon, hams, pork, beef, animal and vegetable oils have multiplied, until in 1935 farm products worth more than $1,300,000,000 at current prices, were imported to enrich the farmers of other countries.

Roosevelt monetary policies caused the dollar to be devalued 40 per cent in gold content, with the result that on the basis of gold the farmer sold his products at prices 18 per cent less than in 1932.

Despite the fact that in his budget message at the start of the year, Roosevelt said that no new taxes would be required, the New Deal's new farm program, new relief expenditures and other costs made it apparent that $1,500,000,000 or more in new taxes would be required.

67 Taxes Squeeze Pocketbook

Chicago.—"Today we have 67 varieties of taxes, direct or indirect, which affect the prices of nearly every commodity of commerce," James M. Beck, noted authority on the Constitution, said here. "Today the American citizen is directly or indirectly taxed from the cradle to the grave. These taxes would be heavy to the point of confiscation were not the largest amount of our public expenditures raised by borrowing against the future, and thus loading down an innocent posterity with intolerable burdens."

Interest on Debt Climbs

Washington.—In the last fiscal year, the New Deal spent more than $7,375,000,000, an increase of 114 per cent in five years. The payment of interest on the national debt is alone greater than the entire expenditures of the government 30 years ago.

CONG. J. I. FARLEY GRATEFUL FOR BIG VOTE IN PRIMARY

Auburn Congressman Regards Renomination as Endorsement of Administration Policies

"I am fully appreciative of and deeply thankful for the very fine compliment which the voters of the Fourth Indiana district paid me in Tuesday's election," Congressman James I. Farley, successful democratic candidate for renomination, declared in a statement today. "I also wish," said Mr. Farley, "to have my thanks noted for the good wishes expressed by my opponent, Judge Clarence R. McNabb of Fort Wayne, in his statement following the election. His promise of supporting is excellent political sportsmanship.

"I do not regard my victory Tuesday as an indorsement of myself so much as it was an indorsement of the things which we have been trying to do down at Washington. Although at times I have differed with policies mistakenly thought to be administrative measures. I can say that in the main I have supported every major administration measure.

"I am going back to Washington within a few days and, when I do, I will carry with me a fine feeling of friendship for not only those who aided me in the primary, but for those who could not support me then but who will be in the ranks again in November."

The statement to which Congressman Farley referred as indicative of McNabb's political sportsmanship was made by McNabb Tuesday evening as soon as it became apparent that McNabb was defeated.

In his statement, McNabb said:

"On numerous occasions during the primary campaign, I wholeheartedly pledged my loyalty to and support of your democratic nominee for congress, whomsoever he may be after your verdict was rendered. It is unmistakably clear to me that you have selected James I. Farley of Auburn, as your nominee. Sportsmanship and loyalty to the democratic party inspire me to publicly concede to Mr. Farley his nomination and to congratulate him on his victory. This I have done privately in a personal conversation with him by telephone. I again pledge to him my personal loyalty and support as our congressional nominee and urge that my friends support his candidacy in November. I ask for a united democracy in this district to the extent that Mr. Farley will be re-elected to congress, in order that the hand of our president may be upheld in our national congress."

Although no announcement has been made by him, it is expected that Judge McNabb will resume the practice of law upon the expiration of his judgeship at the end of the year.

SAYS THAT MANY EMPLOYES HAVE MENTAL DISTURBANCES

Indianapolis, May 6. — Between 20 to 30 per cent of the employes in industry are psychologically maladjusted, Dr. J. L. Rosenstein, consulting psychologist for Eli Lilly & Co., and director of the recently established Mary H. Young human relations clinic, said today.

"Some of these have serious mental disturbances", he said. "Others are just enough removed from what we call the normal to have their efficiency impaired.

"Keeping mental health in our civilization is a serious problem. More of our hospital beds are filled with people suffering from ills of the mind than are occupied by sufferers from all the physical diseases known to science."

To help husbands and wives who can't get along, and to cure people of feelings of inferority and inadequacy, a mental health clinic was opened yesterday at Butler University, Dr. Rosenstein revealed.

"We plan to proceed slowly at first until we are sure in what direction our greatest work lies. Although we are interested in children's cases, most of the emphasis is to be placed on adult problems," he said.

This mental school, made possible through the will of Dr. Mary H. Young, is to function in the field of psychological readjustment for which no other agency is available in the state.

In speaking of this lack of state clinics, Dr. Rosenstein said:

"It is on this point that we quarrel with politicians. They pass laws forcing young people to study history, mathematics, science and language, and completely ignore in school study programs the most important individual problem of all—mental hygiene.

"We are using psycho-therapeutic methods in our clinic. Psychoanalysis does just what the word implies, it analyzes, while psychotherapy attempts to correct.

"After we discover what the individual's problems are in private individual conferences, we show them to him and teach him to handle, not run away from them. What people tell us in these private sessions is held in strictest confidence."

Explaining that insanity is merely a matter of degree, Dr. Rosenstein said that all symptoms found in insane persons also are found in normal people. In the insane these tendencies and symptoms are exaggerated. The personality is out of proportion, he said.

DISINHERITED?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Through successive generations the American people have continued to receive one of the richest heritages in all history.

Freedom of speech and of opportunity . . . the right to a decisive voice in the greatest government on earth . . . a national spirit of courage and self-reliance . . . public wealth beyond the dreams of Croesus —

These are but a few of the treasures won in the blood and the sweat of hard-working, hard-fisted pioneers and left to us as a natural birthright.

How are we preserving that heritage? What is America doing to maintain or increase for posterity the things our fathers won for us? What will this generation leave to those who follow?

Today the list seems discouraging. Its items would include:

A burden of national debt which, as this is written, exceeds $31,000,000,000 — instead of an increasing national wealth.

The threat of a new, alien philosophy of dependence and fear — instead of the spirit that sent Daniel Boone into the wilds of Kentucky and whole families over the hardships of the Oregon Trail.

A glorification of the economic goose-step — instead of the bold, free tread that could carry youth to whatever heights its strength and ability permitted.

No wonder, as it regards this prospect, youth in America feels disinherited. No wonder thousands of older citizens, remembering the opportunities of their own youth, are protesting against a philosophy which robs their sons of similar freedom. No wonder the true descendants of the American pioneer are insisting that personal liberty and personal opportunity must be preserved in this country.

Thousands of our ancestors fought and died to win for us those liberties and opportunities. Thousands more fought to preserve them. The newer generations have a right to enjoy the heritage. We cannot let them down.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 14, 1936 NUMBER 20

SPRINGER CHOICE FOR COUNTY CHAIRMAN

Enthusiasm and optimism marked the organization meeting of the DeKalb County Republican Central committee Saturday afternoon and the re-election of all officers but secretary. The meeting, held in the small court room of the court house was largely attended.

Henry C. Springer, of Butler, who has been head of the organization since 1926 was re-elected county chairman. Mrs. Ida E. Penry, of Auburn, was also re-elected vice chairman. E. E. Turner, of Grant township, was named secretary and Philip S. Carper, of Jackson township, will act as treasurer. W. E. Sargent, of Garrett, is the retiring secretary.

Precinct committeemen for the near-by townships are as follows:

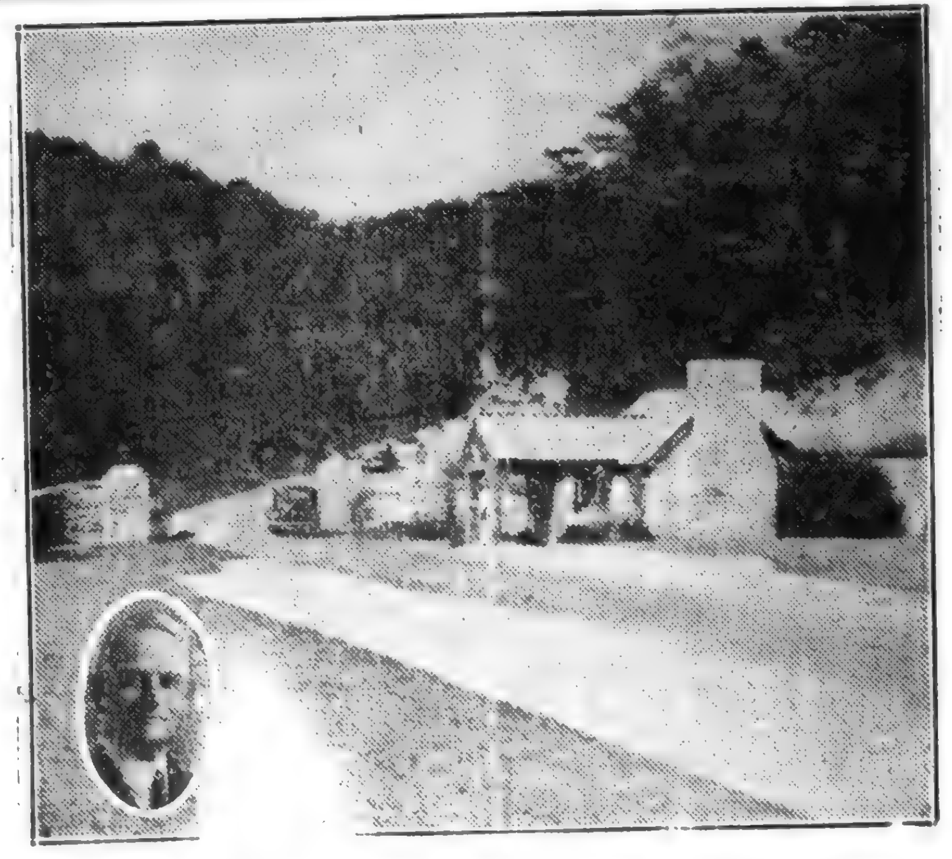
Dedicate "Guthrie Entrance" at Clifty Falls State Park Wednesday



Ceremonies honoring W. A. Guthrie, former state senator and former chairman of the Indiana Conservation Commission, was held at Clifty Falls state park, near Madison, Wednesday afternoon and evening, May 13. Governor Paul V. McNutt was the speaker at the afternoon program when a bronze placque was unveiled at the south entrance to the park. Mayor Marcus Sulzer, of Madison also spoke.

Wednesday evening dinner was served at Clifty Inn with Mr. Guthrie as the honor guest. The dinner was sponsored by the Madison Chamber of Commerce and the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs and were attended by many of the friends of Mr. Guthrie from all parts of the state.

The program was arranged by friends of Mr. Guthrie with the aid of the Department of Conservation, as a recognition of his part in the establishment of Clifty Falls state park and his part in the conservation movement in Indiana. Land for this park was acquired by Jefferson county and given to the state in 1920. It has increased in popularity each year and in 1935 had an attendance of nearly one hundred thousand.

Located on a high plateau overlooking the Ohio River, the park is widely known for its scenery. During the past two and a half years an extensive improvement has been carried on by the Civilian Conservation Corps, one part of which was the building of the "Guthrie Entrance" to the park from Road 56 just west of Madison. Shelter houses and other facilities for the use of visitors were a part of the impovement.

Mr. Guthrie, a native of Dupont, was thoroughly familiar with the area now included in the park, and took an active part in the acquisition of the land as well as in the establishment of state highways in that community.

CAUGHT IN ACT OF WRECKING CAR

When Harry Bassett, of Rural Route No. 1, Auburn, a Concord township boy, went to the parking lot south of the Armory in Fort Wayne early Saturday to get his car he found a woman wrecking the machine. She had broken out four windows, jerked all the wires off spork plugs and torn off the front license plate.

Bassett remonstrated and called police. The officers learned from the woman that she had been picked up at a lunch room by a man, taken for a ride in his auto and then forced out of the machine after he took $4 from her purse. She said she thought Bassett's auto was that of her "boy friend" and determined to wreck it in retaliaion for her alleged mistreatment.

WHEAT FARMERS GET ANOTHER PAYMENT

Checks totaling $9,700.92, the last payment on the 1933-35 wheat program, were distributed Wednesday and Thursday to contract signers in DeKalb county. Concord, Spencer and Newville township farmers received their checks at the Farmers & Merchants bank at Spenceville, May 13 from 8 to 11 A. M. The checks are on a basis of 9 4-10 cents a bushel. Payments on the new soil conservation plan which takes the place of the invalidated AAA will start this fall, the first being a remittance of 20½ cents a bushel.

HORSE SENSE

It will soon be fly time. Why not give the old cows a new freedom from the pesky things by using either a commercial or homemade fly spray. One part of oil of tar with one gallon of used crank case oil makes a very good repellent.

It's wise to plant all early vegetables, which will complete their growth by July, at one side of the garden. Then in July all may be removed, the ground reworked, and the late garden planted there.

There's more money in feeding the low grade, cull vegetables to the hogs than putting them on the market.

Early Ohio and Irish Cobbler are two excellent early varieties of potatoes to plant in Indiana. Late potato varieties, which are the best winter keepers, include Russet or White Rurals and late planted Cobblers.

Potato leaf hopper, Indiana's most serious potato pest, can be controlled by using Bordeaux mixture or copper lime dust.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

IF YOU expect the housework to be well done either by yourself, the maid or the woman who comes in by the day, it is up to you as the homemaker to see that proper tools are supplied. This sounds logical but, unfortunately it takes more than logic to make matters right when the mop wears out, and the day when it must be used comes, and there is no new mop.

Keeping up with household exegencies requires an attention to detail that is amazing. Forgetfulness is usually more at fault than is the lack of funds for replacements, when work is hampered. When the cost exceeds the funds on hand, no blame can be attached to what would otherwise be negligence. When a temporary adjustment has to be made until the purse permits a purchase, it can practically always be made. But such adjustments, when unnecessary, betoken a thoughtless homemaker, and indicate a certain incompetency.

Efficiency.

The efficient homemaker looks ahead. She knows her household equipments and is ready with fresh supplies before there is a hampering lack. There should be shelves in a closet for surplus supplies such as soap, cleansing agents, washing soda, silver polish, etc., just as there are shelves for emergency foods. When anything gets low, a new lot should be ordered before there is danger of getting out. It costs no more to manage this way, and is often an economy, since, taking advantage of sales is possible, instead of finding immediate purchase necessary.

But apart from the things that must be bought, there are often little things which are not ready for use. Chief among these are clean dusters and cleaning cloths. Old cloth does perfectly well for the latter, yet it is often one of the hardest things for a housemaid to get. It is sometimes her own fault, however, as these cleaning cloths must be washed clean, and be dried after using in order for them to be in readiness for the next time. Maids in general dislike to wash cleaning cloths, just as they find it easy to overlook laundering of hot dish holders which should be kept fresh and clean as tea towels.

About Doors.

The function of doors is to open and close entrances and exits, thereby permitting or excluding circulation of air currents, sights, and sounds. These are their architectural requirements, and they are made to do such work with dignity and ornament. Most doors swing on hinges, and open in one direction. There was a law enforced in some localities that outside doors of public buildings must swing out. This was a "safety first" measure in case of fire or any panic which would make easy exit imperative.

In dwellings, front doors open in, with a welcoming gesture. These doors are inside as well as outside features of a house, permitting entrance ways and exits. They open in, because this adds to the convenience. It is awkward to have a door open out especially in a storm and the necessity of letting out a crowd in a hurry is negligible.

Wide doors separating adjoining rooms or halls and rooms which it is desirable to throw together when doors are open, may swing on hinges or work on rollers. In the first instance the doors are always visible whether open or shut. In the second they are only visible when shut or partly shut. They slide in between walls occupying a space made for them.

Glass Doors.

The fashion for having glass doors has revived the hinged double doors to great advantage in some instances, while in others, nothing but the vogue is their recommendation. In very large houses where a room, especially a reception parlor, is seldom used, the glass-paned doors can shut off the room and thus help conserve heat without closing the view. Though doors are shut there is a feeling of space and an intimate view of the unused room which makes it seem to be part of the adjoining room in a very pleasing way.

When full space is lacking for wide hinged doors to be thrown open, double hinging is an interesting way to overcome the difficulty. Each door can be in two hinged sections. This arrangement allows the middle sections to fold back against those hinged to the door frame, so that the doors when open are but half their full width. Thus the doors take but little space, and remain decorative features of the room.

Word to Wise

The most pertinent advice that can be given for painting work of any kind is that skimping is false economy. This advice applies to materials and workmanship alike, in every detail.

HASH MORE THAN LEFTOVER DISH

Concoction Is Taken Seriously by Many Cooks.

By EDITH M. BARBER

HASH! The word carries a pleasant or an unpleasant meaning with it depending upon experience. Nothing can be better and nothing can be worse.

Although probably originated in order to use up left-overs, I have really known people to buy material especially for it. The business woman housekeeper, who is an expert on making a good hash, will find the canned corned beef useful. Here is a recipe sent to me by one of my friends. It will appeal particularly to the business woman housekeeper, as it does not demand cooked potato. From her letter I quote:

"I'll tell you how I had to make hash one day, and I did it ever after.

"You use the tinned or delicatessen cooked or home cooked corned beef. Run the beef through the chopper first, then an onion and enough raw potato to double the quantity. I forgot to state you must park the corned beef by itself pro tem. If you have a little green pepper, add that to the onion and potato. Put it in a skillet and cover with cold water, let it cook until the potato is done and it is almost dry and starchy. (Don't you love my free verse way of writing a recipe?) Then add the c. b. and reheat. As the ol' Maestro says, "I hope you like it."

A letter from a reader tells me that she cannot find a recipe for chicken hash, which should be creamy, as it is when it is served at a hotel. Chicken hash is actually creamed ground chicken. The proportion which is best is one cup of white sauce made with chicken stock and cream to two cups of ground chicken. Minced green pepper may be added.

Corned Beef Hash.

2 tablespoons bacon fat or drippings
2 tablespoons chopped onion
2 cups chopped corned beef, cooked
2 cups boiled potatoes
1 cup stock or milk
Salt and pepper to taste

Melt the fat in a frying pan, add the onion, and brown slightly. Add the remaining ingredients, well mixed. Spread the mixture evenly in a pan and cook over a slow fire for half an hour. It is best to cover the pan at first so that the mixture may become thoroughly heated. If the hash is to be baked allow 45 minutes in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit). The hash may be stirred while cooking so that it will brown all over, but if not stirred it should be folded and served in the same manner as an omelet. Garnish with pickled beets and serve with horseradish sauce.

Lamb Stew With Sour Cream.

2 tablespoons fat
2 small onions
3 pounds shoulder of lamb
Salt
Paprika
2 cups tomato pulp
2 tablespoons minced parsley
1 cup thick sour cream

Heat the fat, add the onions, cut fine, and the meat rubbed with salt and paprika. Brown the meat and the onions, then add the tomato pulp and parsley. Cook the meat slowly for two hours, adding water only if necessary. Just before serving add the sour cream and blend it well with the sauce.

Glazed Carrots.

1 quart cut carrots
2 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons sugar

Wash and cook carrots until tender in a small amount of water with a dash of sugar and salt. Drain. Dot with butter and sprinkle with sugar. Cook until sugar melts.

Spinach With Sour Cream.

Cook washed spinach in a saucepan without water. Add a dash of salt and sugar. Cover. Cook until tender. Whip half a cup of sour cream, add a dash of nutmeg and serve with cooked spinach.

Curried Veal.

2 cups cold veal
2 tablespoons butter
2 cups milk
1 teaspoon curry powder
Salt
Pepper
Parsley
2 tablespoons flour.

Cut veal in small pieces. Melt butter, add flour and when blended gradually add hot milk and seasonings. Stir over fire until thick, add chicken. Serve with boiled rice, garnish with raw bananas cut lengthwise, and top with parsley.

Cabbage and Apple Salad.

1 pint finely shredded cabbage
1 red apple finely diced
¾ cup mayonnaise
2 tablespoons chili sauce or catsup
Chopped nuts

Mix cabbage, apple, mayonnaise and chili sauce or catsup and add more salt, if desired. Serve on lettuce or small cabbage leaves. Sprinkle with nuts.

To Break in Brush

A new paint brush should be broken in on the priming coat, never on one of the finishing coats. It should first be dipped in the paint to a depth of two or three inches and wiped across the edge with a mixing paddle several times to work the paint well into the clean bristles.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Absent-Minded Carpenter

WHEN Charles G. Grant, former Ohio newspaper man, was a boy in Columbus he knew a carpenter named J. Elmer Putterbaugh who was just about the best in the business. No job was ever too big for him to tackle, according to Mr. Grant. "Why, I remember the time," he says, "when J. Elmer took the contract to build a big church over near Washington Court House. He got so interested in his work that he forgot to stop. So the main aisle was so long that they had to have two preachers—one to stand at the altar and marry folks and the other to stand at the front door and christen their first baby as they came out."

Another time J. Elmer's absent-mindedness got him in trouble. He was shingling the roof on a barn when a thick fog came sweeping up the valley from the Ohio river. J. Elmer kept right on shingling and without noticing what he was doing shingled 26 feet of fog beyond the edge of the roof before he noticed his mistake.

This turned out to be pretty serious because he fell and broke one of his legs off clean when he tried to get down. As a result he had to have a wooden leg, but that meant more trouble. Every time J. Elmer reached down to scratch his knee cap he'd get a splinter in his finger. That made him so angry that he'd grab his saw and saw his wooden leg right off. It broke him up buying new wooden legs. At last he went to a pauper's grave.

"But they had a hard time keeping him in it," declares Mr. Grant. "You see, J. Elmer was something of a cross-roads philosopher—just full of wise saws. His ghost used one of these to saw his way out of the pine box in which they buried him. Folks got pretty tired of having his ghost chasing around at night. So they finally captured it, enclosed it in a box of chilled steel and from that time on there has been nothing but frozen silence out of J. Elmer Putterbaugh."

The Crazy Woman Wrangler

ART QUIGLEY was a cow hand, temporarily, for Half Circle ranch near Buffalo, Wyo.; it was there he met the wrangler from Crazy Woman River and heard his story.

"I was a tenderfoot," acknowledges Quigley. "So much so, I'd rise at daybreak, saddle up and ride to Buffalo to eat hash house breakfast with the rest of the Chinamen.

"One morning another rider yelled at me, back trail, but I paid no attention. Figured he'd spotted me for a tenderfoot cause I wore the only stiff-brimmed Stetson of the county.

"Catching up, the stranger introduced himself as the Wrangler from Crazy Woman River. An old fellow, but plenty pert and capable. Pointing to a grove we passed, the wrangler said that there, after a night in Buffalo, he met a bear. Had only a rifle and just three .22 shorts—not much to use if you're loading for bear.

"He drew careful bead and fired. The bear went down. Then he was up. It was like the radio report of a prize-fight. My friend aimed and fired. Again the bear fell, once more was up. Aiming carefully over his horse's neck, the man from Crazy Woman fired his last .22 and saw the bear fall.

"Leaping down, Bowie knife in hand, he charged. And he was tremendously relieved to discover three bears, all dead in the trail . . .

"I believe the story implicitly," says Quigley. "You see, this Crazy Woman fellow never once regarded me as a tenderfoot, but he treated me like an old-timer on the range."

It's a Ringer!

ONE subscriber to the belief that, in the long run, truth must prevail is John D. McDougall, nestor among grain receivers in the Chicago market.

"Here is the proof of what I am compelled to tell," Mr. McDougall asserted, indicating a sheaf of beautifully ripened wheat. "The facts concern a friend and customer of mine, one A. J. Sundberg of Hillsboro, N. D.

"Sundberg shipped this sample of fine wheat. When I complimented him upon its quality he relaxed, as most folks do under the influence of praise, and he recalled some of the difficulties under which the grain grew.

"Why, even at a time this wheat was ripening—my friend told me—he hitched his wagon team to a weeping willow tree out in the fields and responded to the cheery invitation of the dinner bell.

"He was gone 41 minutes but grasshoppers invaded the place in such numbers they devoured both horses and all of the wagon except its tongue. When my friend finished his dinner all that was left of the horses was their shoes. And the grasshoppers were playing quoits with them."

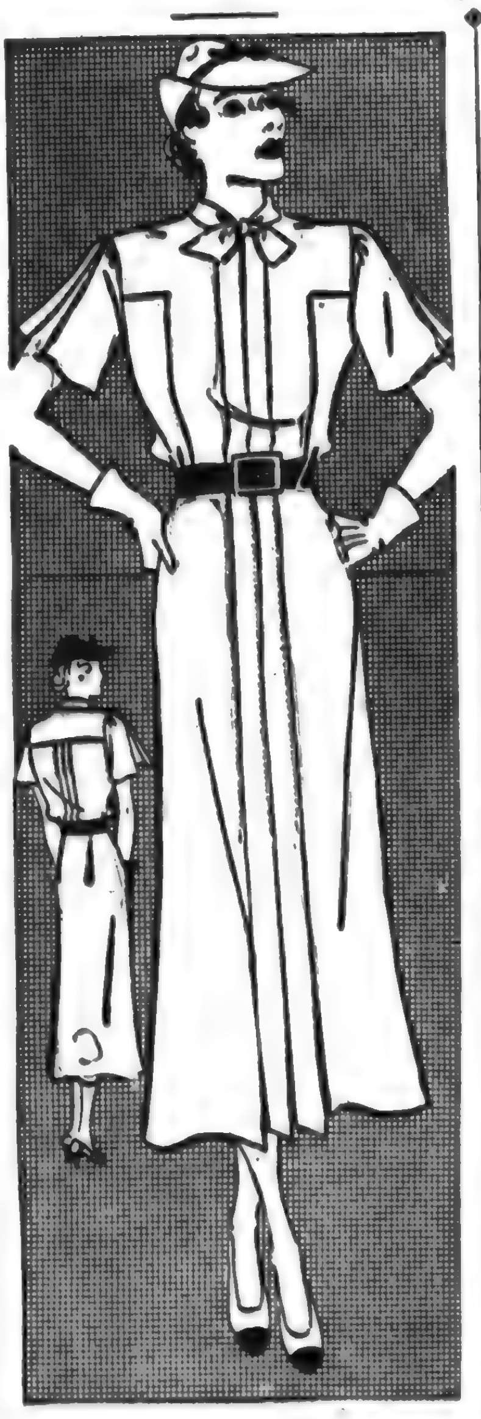
Presidential Franks

Since the early days of the nation Presidents of the United States have been authorized to frank their mail, that is, send it post-free. Early laws, says Pathfinder Magazine, required the President's actual signature "written by his own hand" but from the time of Hayes on the well known "penalty" envelope has been used. More recently the custom has been to use the simple inscription, "The White House."

New Slit Sleeves and Youthful Bodice Go With This Spectator Sports Frock



Pattern No. 1868-B

Some are chosen and some are not, as you remember. And this is one of the "summer" chosen! A pretty bad pun, but this perfectly stunning spectator sports frock makes up for it. And you can wear it yourself when summer sets in if you'll send for the pattern now.

It is surprisingly easy to make, and with the aid of the step-by-step chart, illustrating the cut and fit of the new slit sleeves and the way to pleat and stitch-up the youthful bodice, you will immediately realize how automatically it goes together. The bodice has a lot of blouse to it, even makes you suspect that it's held underneath by an elastic band, and the side pleats of the skirt harmonize beautifully with the action pleats in the back blouse.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1868-B is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 (34) requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material. Send fifteen cents for the pattern.

The Barbara Bell Pattern Book featuring spring designs is ready. Send fifteen cents today for your copy.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up.

But no matter how staunchly Grandfather and Grandmother kept the iron gates locked against the world, they knew that some day they would have to be opened, even if only to allow themselves to pass through, on their last journeys. For many years the question of Deborah's future, when the iron gates should be opened, gave them anxious hours of discussion. She would have a fortune greater than her father's before her, since it had grown through the years. She had no relatives other than her grandparents, and to depend on the guardianship of old family friends, most of whom had never been in sympathy with Grandfather's ideas about Deborah's upbringing, was impossible. Deborah must be completely secure. So, when she was thirteen, eight years ago, Grandfather had gone away to San Francisco on a journey, and when he returned he had stopped frowning, and they told her that her future happiness was taken care of.

Courtney Graham, less than a year after the marriage of Deborah's mother, had taken unto himself a wife. For him to do so had been a blow, but after talking it over for a number of years, Grandfather and Grandmother had consoled themselves by saying that of course Anne, as far as Courtney knew at the time of his marriage, was happy; that if she had been dead, Courtney would have devoted his life to mourning her loss, would have considered himself a widower. No; Courtney had been a perfect New England gentleman and he had done no wrong.

He had a son, born two months after Deborah herself. The boy's name was Stuart, and now at thirteen he was a tall handsome lad of great promise. His father and grandfather both thought that a second attempt at an alliance between the two families might prove a happy one. So it was understood that if the young people were willing, they should marry each other when they grew up.

It was here that Mr. Larned showed that his unhappy experience had not gone for nothing. He was determined to leave nothing to chance. He was determined that everything should contribute toward making the young people willing to marry each other—although, of course, there was not the slightest reason why they should not be. But he made his will, and it was a model of ingenuity. In it he said that his granddaughter Deborah should inherit the large part of his fortune, amounting to something over a million dollars in government bonds, if and only if she married Stuart Graham on or before her twenty-first birthday. On her twenty-first birthday her grandfather, if he were alive, would be eighty-five years of age. It was not likely that he would live long after that date, so the old man faced the situation squarely: if he should die before her twenty-first birthday, she and her grandmother were to live on the income from a selected list of more profitable securities chosen by him with great care; and if anything happened to prevent Deborah from marrying young Graham, then the fortune was to go to charities, but she was to have the income from the securities for life. The latter was sufficient to make her comfortable and keep her from want or poverty; but it was not sufficient to attract the attention of a scoundrelly fortune hunter such as her father had been.

The will was carefully planned and executed, and Grandfather smiled and nodded to himself whenever he thought of it. An absolute fool-proof and rogue-proof plan, he said to his wife over and over. In her gentle way she agreed.

Grandfather had died when Deborah was just past fifteen; and things had gone quite smoothly for nearly three years longer, with Gary managing everything, the house, the business letters, the money matters. But then something strange and unexpected had happened out in the world, and Gary began to go about with a worried frown. Finally — and Deborah was eighteen then—she had made him tell her the truth.

There was something about a crash in New York, something had toppled and fallen, and their careful list of securities had collapsed into a careless heap which was bringing them scarcely enough to live on. Grandmother didn't know, of course. Grandmother couldn't be told anything like that. Gary had been most relieved to tell Deborah, and it had been good fun at first, to think of themselves as poor. Of course it would be only until Deborah was twenty-one, and then they would be wealthier than ever. Until Deborah was twenty-one—it had run like a thread of song through everything they did, through all the little subterfuges to keep Grandmother from knowing, through the hard work, the gardening, the building of the smoke house to cure venison and fish for the larder, the cutting down and making over of Grandmother's old clothes for Deborah, the enlarging of Grandfather's things for Gary.

And then, suddenly, Deborah was twenty and a half.

Twenty and a half, and marriage was something unknown and frightening. What was marriage? Why did a girl have to marry a man, a young man she had never seen, and . . . well, when she did marry him, what happened? Grandmother wouldn't explain. She said Stuart was a gentleman, and anything Deborah didn't quite understand, he would explain to her. But it wasn't enough. And, for the first time in her life, Deborah couldn't ask Gary. Gary knew she didn't know, and he knew she was beginning to feel terrified and cold inside about it. And his kind old face was lined and heavy, and his eyes followed her about with misery and worry. They talked about love. Well, that was easy. Deborah loved Grandmother dearly, her sweet, fragile old face, her tender hands, her soft gentle smile. She would have done anything for Grandmother. But it wasn't like that; Grandmother had said so herself, blushing furiously. She said the love a woman had for her husband was something quite different, stronger, more wonderful.

Stuart Graham was writing to her now. He had begun when she was twenty, and over the first letter Gary had shaken his head and said it sounded very sudden, somehow; and over the second he said the fellow seemed to want to know an awful lot about what kind of investments Grandfather had left his money in. Gary had gone so far as to talk that over with Grandmother, and she had said quietly that of course the dear boy was interested, since he would so soon have control of the estate; and that the Grahams had far more money than themselves and always had. Gary couldn't suggest to her, of course, that the Grahams might not have their money any longer. He and Deborah talked it over, and Deborah had said, with those cold fingers at her heart and a smile on her lips, that it didn't matter whether Stuart had any money or not, that surely she had enough for two, and the situation was that if she didn't marry him, poor or not poor, there wouldn't be anything for any of them. The time was desperate. Gary said miserably that they wouldn't be able to pay the taxes on the only home they had, if they didn't get some money soon. So of course there was nothing to do but go through with it.

And then the very worst thing of all happened. For some reason that Grandmother couldn't understand, except that since a Graham had done it there must be a reason and a good one, Stuart had joined the navy two or three years ago. And now something had occurred, something he didn't quite explain. As a result, he was not going to be able to leave his ship by Deborah's twenty-first birthday.

For a few days, Gary and Grandmother and Deborah were thrown into consternation; and although for a moment when his letter first came, Deborah had run out and hugged a tree for sheer joy, she had seen in no time that something had to be done. Stuart had a plan. He had gone on to explain that, fortunately enough, his ship would be with the rest of the Pacific fleet, anchored in Golden Gate harbor in San Francisco bay; and that it would be quite simple after all. Deborah could come down and meet him in San Francisco, and they could be married there.

Quite simple for Stuart, perhaps, but a most upsetting idea for Deborah and Grandmother and Gary. Obviously, if Deborah went, she must go alone; since Grandmother could not possibly go, and Gary could not possibly leave her. And Deborah had been so little in the world; she had never traveled anywhere alone. The world was a huge noisy whirling place, and she had lived always in the quiet and peace of the mountains. Still, it was only a matter of a trip to San Francisco; because, once there, she could go directly to the hotel Grandmother knew about, the hotel at which they had stayed years ago; and from the hotel she could go to Mr. Holworthy's office where Stuart would meet her. Stuart was a Graham, and a gentleman, and as soon as she met him her troubles would be over, for he would tell her everything she needed to know.

This was what Grandmother said, and outwardly Deborah assented; but to her he was really a man and a stranger, and in her heart was a deadly terror of marriage and whatever it might mean, of meeting this strange man and being with him, being alone with him.

Ancient Tortoise

A specimen of a tortoise that lived on this continent about thirty-five million years ago is on display in the collection of fossil animals in the Ernest R. Graham hall in the Field museum, it was announced recently. The shell and skeleton of the animal, which is 48 inches long, were found in a sandy bluff along the North Platte river in western Nebraska and the specimen was reconstructed in the museum laboratories.

POULTRY

WATCH WEIGHT OF PULLETS FIRST YEAR

Frequent Checks Should Be Made of Progress.

By C. O. Dossin, Poultry Department, Pennsylvania State College.—WNU Service.

Pullets should gain in weight during the first laying year. Some poultrymen make a practice of marking a few pullets and then weighing these same birds every week or two through the fall months to keep a check on the birds' weight. Others just catch a few of the birds occasionally and handle them for weight and amount of flesh on the breastbone.

If one has occasion to go into the hen house at night after the birds are on the perches, that is also a good time to check on the birds' weight and condition. Another good time to note the amount of flesh on the breast is while removing the eggs from underneath the pullets in the nests.

If the pullets lose weight, there is a good possibility of their going into a molt. To maintain body weight or to increase it, feed more to the birds. Give all the scratch feed the birds will eat at night and about one-half that amount in the morning. Keep dry mash before the birds at all times. Filling the feeders with fresh mash each day will encourage greater mash intake than when the feeders are filled once or twice a week. Stirring up the mash in the feeders occasionally also helps.

The use of lights in the hen house to lengthen the working day of the birds will increase feed intake. A 13 or 14-hour day will meet the requirements of the average flock.

Two Principal Methods of Finishing Poultry

There are two principal methods of finishing poultry — pen-feeding and crate feeding. The former method is generally used for turkeys and waterfowl, the latter for chickens of all ages. Some feeders follow the practice of pen feeding for a couple of weeks and then "finish off" in crates. Batteries are commonly used in intensive plants, but for ordinary farm use crates are equally satisfactory and are inexpensive. The quarters where the birds are to be "finished" should be dry, cool and well ventilated, and the birds should have quiet and freedom from excitement.

The general purpose or heavyweight breeds are best suited for crate feeding and best results can be expected only where strong, vigorous, sturdy type birds are used. Before starting the finishing period, the birds should be dusted with flowers of sulphur or some other suitable preparation to insure their freedom from lice.

Lice Halt Laying

Practical poultrymen know that an infestation of lice can quickly throw a normal and healthy flock out of production. Of course, there are other causes which will interrupt steady laying, but when your flock suddenly begins to slack down in production, it is wise to look immediately for lice. If they are present you probably have found the cause of trouble—and you can quickly eliminate it. Many poultrymen do not wait for lice to appear but dust their poultry houses as a preventive. This, of course, is a help rather than a curative treatment—but it certainly is worth while when one takes into consideration the loss caused by even just a few days loss of production.

Feed Seaweed

Scientists at Cornell university, occupied with discovering a better, more effective cure for goitre, went to the sea and gathered therefrom great quantities of seaweed. A flock of hens then were taken to coops and were fed the "sea spinach." The "sea spinach" abounds in the particular type of iodine that is the enemy of goitre, and eggs from these specially fed hens were found to contain 500 times as much iodine as ordinary eggs. The scientists further decided that what's good for hens is good for cows. Several bossies, too, were fed "sea spinach." Milk contained more of the valuable important iodine.

Geese Are Profitable

Abundant pasture of a sort that is tender and remains green for a long period is the most economical basis for the raising of geese. A stream or pond, or even tanks of water may serve for the aquatic needs of the birds, and shelter may be reduced to a minimum. In the South none is required and in the North a simple shed open to the south is sufficient. Geese can be raised successfully and profitably in all parts of the United States, but are more abundant in the Middle West.

Feeding for Production

Many poultrymen are getting higher production by feeding only a small amount of grain in the morning and the remainder at night. The morning grain is fed in a clean litter from 4 to 6 inches deep and consists of about one pound of grain for each 100 hens. The afternoon feeding is put in troughs. The practice of feeding grain at different intervals of the day, especially during the winter months, increases the activity of the birds and overcomes idleness.

Former Winners Have Chance to Set New 500-Mile Race Records May 30th

KELLY PETILLO
LOUIS MEYER
BILL CUMMINGS
FRED FRAME

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Four former winners are scheduled to start in the 24th running of the annual 500-mile automobile race at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on May 30 and at least two of them have the opportunity to make racing history.

Kelly Petillo, ex-truck driver who set a new average of 106.24 miles per hour in his victory drive last year, may be the first pilot to win successive races. The "King of the Ridge," a sobriquet the smiling young Italian picked up while driving a fruit truck over the difficult ridge route in California, will be a favorite in this year's race if he elects to step out as fast as he did last year.

Louis Meyer, only active two-time winner of the Decoration Day classic, with victories in 1928 and 1933, may become the only three-time winner if he gets the fortunate wave of the checkered flag at the end of his day's work. A consistent but daring driver, Meyer is always a serious contender.

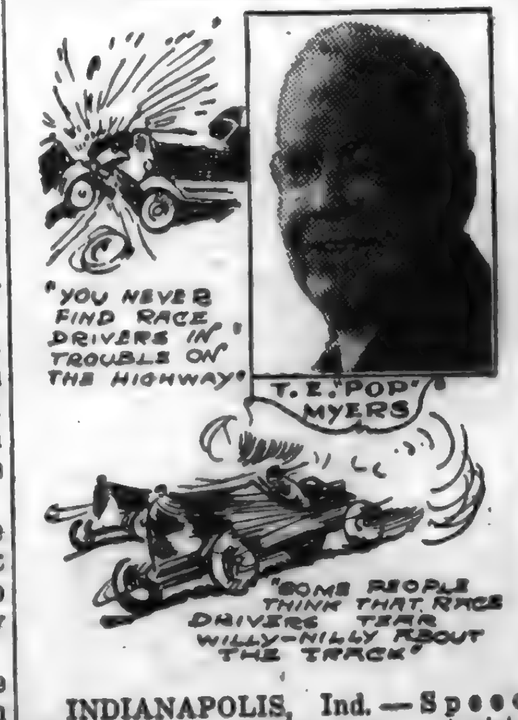
Wild Bill Cummings, winner in 1934, came within striking distance of first place last year, pulling in a good third. Most popular of the young drivers, he will carry short odds.

The veteran campaigner, Fred Frame, who won in 1932, is also scheduled to be present and can always be counted high up in the money if his motor holds together.

Ranger Trophy

This Apache war dane loin cloth, displayed by Rangerette Mabel Rooks, will be part of the historical collection in the Texas Rangers' Headquarters at the Texas Centennial Exposition, $25,000,000 World's Fair opening in Dallas June 6. The cloth was taken from an Apache war party by Rangers in 1860.

Speed Kings to Aid Road Safety Drive



"YOU NEVER FIND RACE DRIVERS IN TROUBLE ON THE HIGHWAY"
T. E. "POP" MYERS
"SOME PEOPLE THINK THAT RACE DRIVERS TEAR WILLY-NILLY ABOUT THE TRACK"

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—Speed kings will preach safety to motorists of Indiana this year.

Co-operating with the Governor's committee on public safety for the State of Indiana, T. E. "Pop" Myers, for 25 years general manager of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, is enlisting the services of the nation's greatest race drivers to spread the message of sane driving among the general public.

"If the ordinary motorist observed the good judgment and courtesy that race drivers put into practice in the annual 500-mile race at the Speedway each May 30, we would have practically no trouble on our highways today," says Mr. Myers.

"Some people think that the race driver is tearing about the track, willy-nilly and in a hurry to get to the end of the competition, but such is not the case. The good driver knows exactly where he is going all of the time and how best to get there. He never passes another car unless he knows exactly what that car is going to do in the turns and he always moves over when another car wants to pass him, regardless how keen he is on victory. You never find race drivers in trouble on the highway because they know the danger of aimless driving and never do it. I am sure the boys can do considerable good in assisting in the public safety campaign now being directed by Governor Paul V. McNutt.

Charles was dressed up with white shirt and trousers, and he went to the rear of Hurni's store, and being of a free and good nature, he insisted on helping to unload the cream from the truck. The first can he reached for struck a nail in the truck bed, fell toward him and the lid came off, and four gallons of cream covered Charles from head to foot. He was a sight to behold, so we are told, and those who saw it nearly passed out at his plight. He made his way up the back street to his home where he had a job explaining his condition to his wife.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1936 NUMBER 21

FISHERMEN SHOULD GET LICENSES NOW

Hoosier anglers who are anticipating the opening of the fishing season of June 16th, and do not already have their 1936 licenses should get them now. The 1936 Indiana fishing licenses may be secured from the county clerk in each county, from most hardware and sporting goods stores and other agents. The St. Joe News can supply any in this section.

The Indiana laws provide that every person eighteen years of age or over, must have a license to fish in the state of Indiana except upon their own premises. The fishing license, issued Indiana residents upon payment of a $1 fee, also entitles the holder to hunt and trap and is good until January 1, 1937. Special fishing licenses are issued for non-residents of the state. One of these is good for ten days from date of issue, and the second is good for the remainder of the calendar year. The 10-day license is issued upon payment of a $1 fee, and the second upon payment of a fee of $2.25 by the non-resident fisherman.

PICTURE SHOW DREW LARGE CROWD

The first of a series of open air Talkies was given last Saturday night, to a good sized crowd. The program will be made up of features for children as well as a good 8 reel picture for the older ones.

Next Satuday night another and better picture will be given. Make St. Joe your Saturday night trading headquarters and enjoy the entertainment as provided by the merchants.

This week's picture will be William Colier in "Fighting Gentleman" with selected short pictures to complete the allotted time.

Next week's feature will be Slim Summerville in "Montana Skies."

GETTING READY FOR MEMORIAL DAY

Memorial Day will again be recognized as one of the great patriotic days of the year, and St. Joe will observe it as in the past, with a great spirit of reverence and devotion for the fallen heroes of past years.

Great pride has always been taken in the decorating of graves in outlying cemeteries in the morning and then the afternoon being devoted to a service, embracing the entire community at the gym with decorating of graves in Riverside Cemetery.

Pride has always been maintained by the care takers in our local cemetery and already they are laboring daily to maintain this high state of cleanliness.

Flowers will be placed on practically every grave during the latter part of Memorial week.

The program will be in shape for publication next week, and will be in charge of the Walter Whitehurst Post.

4-H CLUB ORGANIZE FOR SUMMER WORK

The members of the 4-H Club met at the home of their leader, Mrs. Doris Yeiser, on Wednesday, May 13 at 2:00 o'clock. There were three mothers present, Mrs. Shuff, Mrs. Goldsmith and Mrs. Chorpenning. At 2:30 the county leader, Mrs. Boger arrived and explained all about the intentions of the club this summer.

After Mrs. Boger left the president appointed the refreshment and entertainment committees. On the refreshment committee were Jean Goldsmith and Leila Hurni. Entertainment, Peggajo Chorpenning, chairman, Nelda Kees and Jacqualine Shuff.

The second meeting of the club was held with Mrs. Yeiser on Monday, May 18. At the business session it was decided to call the club the "St. Joe Valley Boosters." Nineteen members responded to roll call. A song by June Goldsmith; secretary's report; Bible reading by Garnet Cook; reading by Rosemary Yeiser, and a special report on "Know your own hands" by Betty Kees, completed the meeting. Jean Goldsmith and Leila Hurni served a dainty lunch consisting of meat sandwiches, orange cubes and pickles.

Two contests were enjoyed. The next meeting will be with Mrs. Yeiser, Monday, May 25 at 2:00. All mothers invited to attend.

HORSE SENSE

Farms where considerable livestock is kept usually make larger earnings than farms obtaining most of their income from the sale of crops.

Indiana harvests and sells annually about a half million bushels of sweet potatoes of the dry-fleshed varieties. During the past five years Indiana's white potato acreage has increased 24,000 acres.

The Katahdin is a new potato variety and does well in Indiana as a late crop.

A thorough dormant spray goes a long ways towards eliminating San Jose scale in the fruit orchard.

Second growths, growth cracks, knobby and ill-shaped potatoes are caused by climatic conditions, and not by soil factors.

Peonies often fail to bloom for lack of fertility in the soil. Superphosphate, at the rate of two trowelfuls per plant, scratched in the soil, will bring results if watered heavily.

W. H. SOMMERS DIES IN HIS AUTOMOBILE

Death came suddenly to W. A. Sommers, aged 60 years, at Spencerville at 10:30 o'clock Friday morning.

He was stricken with a heart attack and passed away in his car while at a filling station at Spencerville. Mr. and Mrs. Sommers had started for Auburn to see a physician. As the station attendant was filling the tank for Mr. Sommers' car with gasoline, he expired.

A life long resident of DeKalb county, Mr. Sommers was well and favorably known. He had been a farmer near Coburn's Corners until about four years ago when his health failed and since then he had been employed in Walter Baker's store in Spencerville.

MORTUARY

SOMMERS

William Albert Sommers, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sommers, was born in Allen County, Indiana, October 30, 1876, and departed this life May 15, 1936, being 59 years, 6 months and 15 days of age.

December 24, 1899 he was married to Miss Jessie E. Baltz. With exception of about five years at Akron, Ohio, he spent his entire life in and near Specerville. He lived on a farm for some time, and later he became a merchant and came in contact with and made mny friends.

Besides his wife he leaves one sister, Mrs. Mary Hawk; and one nephew, Raymond Hawk; and one niece, Beulah Sommers, all of Akron, Ohio.

In early life he united with the church and for the last eight years he served on the church council. He was an efficient and faithful teacher in the Sunday School. He also served as superintendent of the Sunday School. He loved the work of the church and lived a consistent christian life ever striving to learn more and to follow in the footsteps of his Lord and Master.

He was a devoted husband, a true neighbor and friend.

"Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea.

But such a tide as, moving, seems asleep,
Too full for sound or foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark.

For tho' from out our bourne of Time and Place
The flood may bear me far
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar."

Funeral services were conducted by Rev. C. J. Ferster, assisted by Rev. A. K. Mumma at 10:30 A. M. Monday at the Lutheran Church at Spencerville. Interment in White City Cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

I appreciate fully the kindness shown by friends and neighbors, during my late bereavement caused by the untimely death of my husband, and for the beautiful floral offerings.

Mrs. Jessie Sommers.

The DeKalb delegation attending the Lutheran Synodical Convention at Evansville report an unusually good convention and automobile trip. The season in the extreme southern part of the state is also backward and the farmers are plowing and planting corn that would have been knee high in normal years. The three hundred and seventy miles that is the length of the state of Indiana, ordinarily makes much difference in crop growth. This year there is no difference. Another noticeable thing that was brought to the party's attention was the fact that the paved roads have helped the small towns down state instead of hindering them. Towns from 400 to 1000 inhabitants were incorporated, having water systems, and modern store buildings. The old structures having been replaced by modern designs.

Blondy by a Tongue!

'WAY back in 1892—said the Old turfman—I owned as beautiful a racing mare as ever was foaled. Her name was Blondy because of her color.

My other possession was a farm in the Blue Grass country on which was hung a "plaster" of $15,000.

Bad luck cut between me and the purses although Nigger Jim, my trainer, would get her cream-colored body in the pink before every race.

We taught Blondy a lot of tricks, between losing races. One was to make a face. Nigger Jim or I would hold an apple or carrot so she had to stretch her neck and put out her tongue for it. And she got so she would do this whenever we told her "make a face."

We entered the mare in a claiming race at Churchill Downs the spring of '92. It was May 15, to be exact. The mortgage on the farm was due May 16. Nigger Jim had Blondy in great form for the 1¼ mile race. But the bookies were laying 20 to 1 against our nag. I managed to scare up exactly one thousand berries and placed the whole roll at 20 to 1. It was win the race or lose the farm.

The horses were away evenly but 100 yards from the start Blondy stumbled and lost stride. We groaned but heartened as she winged away, regaining lost ground at every jump. Then a horse cut in front of her. It was Dixie Dude, and she had to be pulled.

Down the back stretch and around the turn they came. Blondy was moving up on the outside. When they hit the stretch she and Dixie Dude were running head and head.

It looked like a certain dead heat but at the last jump or two Nigger Jim, hanging on the rail, yelled "Make a face, Yo' Blondy! Make a face!" Thank God! Blondy heard, straightened her neck, shot out her tongue across the finish line and won the race."

Man-Made Mesas

AFTER Paul Bunyan finished his work logging off the Pacific Northwest he decided he'd become an oil-driller. First thing he did was to go down into New Mexico and begin drilling a well on top of a mountain.

Paul's well was sunk to a depth of 14,006 feet without a sign of oil. Funny thing about that mountain—it was made up of alternate layers of thin rock and dry sand.

One night a windstorm came up. And how she did blow! The next morning when Paul woke up he looked out of the window of his shack and such a sight as met his eyes! There was his hole, standing straight up in the air as high as he could see. The wind had blown all the sandy layers away from it but the layers of rock were hanging around it like washers pushed around a drill stem.

Paul was pretty mad about it but he didn't waste any time standing around cussing. He just took a sledge and climbed up to the top of the hole. When he got there, he began pounding the hole down into the ground again. As he did so the layers of rock began to come together and in less than no time they made a mesa.

That sort of thing happened time after time and that's why New Mexico is so full of mesas. They're perpetual monuments to Paul Bunyan's unsuccessful oil-drilling operations there.

The Squalling Squonk

SOME cold, winter night, as you sit before a roaring fire in a hunting lodge or in the bunkhouse of a lumber camp in the North Woods, you're certain to hear outside a long-drawn-out moaning. But if you think it's the wind in the bare branches of the trees, you're mistaken! Your lumberjack friend will tell you it's a squonk, mourning because it has a warty, ill-fitting skin.

That's all a squonk ever does—just goes wandering among the hemlock trees, weeping and sobbing bitterly because its skin doesn't fit. When the thermometer is down to nine degrees above zero, you can follow it by the little globules of ice it leaves behind—the squonk's trail of frozen tears.

Because it is such a shy, nocturnal animal few men have ever seen a squonk. But once a lumberjack, by imitating its cries, lured one into his cabin. The little beast seemed perfectly satisfied until he shut it up in a wicker basket. Then it began to sob and moan.

This went on for hours, then died down. The lumberjack peeked into the basket to see if the squonk had cried itself to sleep. But all he found was salt water and a few bubbles. The squonk had dissolved itself in its own tears. "I mighta known better," said the lumberjack, as he added one of his own tears to the collection, "than to have shut up a squonk in a basket made from branches of the weeping willow tree."

Strange Burial Custom

The Toradjas, a primitive race of Celebes, have strange burial customs. The body remains in the house for two years, until the death rites have been completed, and then it is placed in a tomb, cut in the side of a mountain, the entrance of which is forever guarded by a lifelike effigy. Incidentally, the Toradjas are the only people whose holy men are known to dress in women's clothes.—Collier's Weekly.

POULTRY

CAN REDUCE COST OF POULTRY FEED

May Replace Costly Rations With Soybean Meal.

By R. E. Cray, Poultry Department, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

Poultrymen can reduce the costs of rations for chicks and for the laying flock by substituting pressure-cured soybean meal for part of the high priced ingredients that are used to furnish the birds' protein.

Dried milk and meat scraps, two common materials used to furnish protein in poultry rations, cost more than the soybean meal; and the cost of the ration for laying hens is very important at this season of declining egg prices. The soybean meal can be used to replace at least one-half of the meat scrap and to reduce the amount of dried milk to 2 per cent of the laying ration. From 3 to 5 per cent of dried milk should be kept in chick rations.

Ground soybeans containing the natural oil cannot be used successfully as poultry feed, but the meal produced at mills where the oil is extracted is satisfactory except that a mineral mixture should be added. The mineral mixture can be made of 40 pounds bone meal, 20 pounds limestone, and 20 pounds salt. This mixture should be used at the rate of one pound to every five pounds of soybean meal.

At present market prices, dried milk is selling for five times as much as soybean meal and meat scraps are nearly twice as expensive. Decreasing the amount of milk in the ration will lower the vitamin G content but this can be supplied by feeding green grass, good legume hay, or alfalfa meal.

Early Care Basis for Future Flock Profits

The future success of the poultry flock depends a great deal upon the care and management of growing chicks in the spring. Give them proper care and they will grow into strong, vigorous, profitable birds.

Some of the fundamentals to observe while the chicks are young were pointed out as follows:

Do not overcrowd. See that there are not more than two chicks for each square foot of floor space in the brooder house.

Provide two half-gallon drinking founts for each 100 chicks. One five-foot mash hopper will be enough for each 100 chicks during the first three weeks.

From the age of three weeks until they reach broiler size, each 100 chicks should have two mash hoppers four inches high, six inches wide, and five feet long.

Inadequate feeding and drinking facilities is one of the worst faults in poultry raising.

Have adequately controlled ventilation. More chicks are killed or weakened by overheating than by chilling.

Keep the feed hoppers filled with a well balanced mash.

Aim to have the chicks consuming about equal parts of mash and scratch feed at the sixth week.

Maintain rigid sanitation.

Cull all slow developing chicks. These seldom "come through" and prove profitable.

When the weather permits, get the chicks out on the ground. A great deal of benefit is gained from sunshine, green feed, and fresh air.

Use Clean Dry Litter

Straw is not the best litter there is for baby chicks. Oat hulls, peat moss, finely ground corn cobs, shavings, etc., are said to be better. If merely the "best" litter were the only consideration not much would be left to say on the subject. The facts are farmers have to get by as cheaply as possible and at the same time strive for good results. It is true that wheat and oat straw becomes damp quickly and if not chopped up fine is too coarse for small chicks, yet on most farms it is by far the cheapest litter available, is grown on the farm and requires no outlay of cash. That good results can be had by using it is indisputable. The important thing about it is to use plenty—change it often.

Poultry Notes

A good lighting system in the poultry house increases the annual production of the birds.

• • •

Eggs from yearling hens are best for hatching, as breeding stock must be fully matured to obtain strong, healthy chicks.

• • •

The poultry industry is a sizable business, worthy of best efforts whether in research, teaching, production or marketing.

• • •

Hens should be kept housed in winter, but should have straw to scratch in, so they may exercise.

• • •

The upkeep of a flock of bantams, large or small, is about half the cost of a like amount of regular size poultry. They eat little more than a pigeon.

• • •

Ten per cent or more of the pullets can be culled from the flock at the end of the first laying season without materially affecting the number of eggs produced.

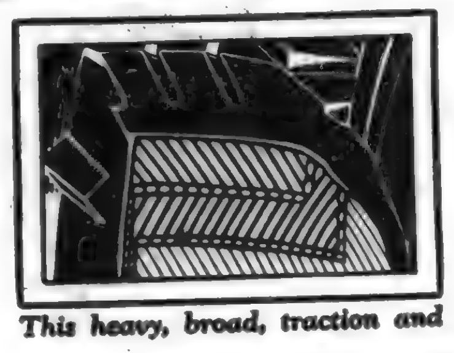
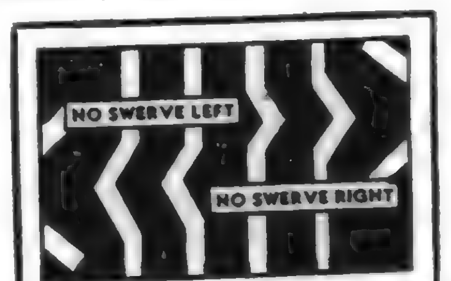
End of cord in Gum-Dipped Tire showing every fiber insulated with liquid rubber
End of cord from ordinary tire showing unprotected cotton fibers inside cord

The body of the New Firestone High Speed Tire is made from selected long-staple cotton dipped in liquid rubber, absorbing eight pounds of rubber in every hundred pounds of cotton. This patented Gum-Dipping process insulates every fiber in every cotton cord, preventing internal friction which creates the heat so destructive to tire life, and giving to the tire added strength.



This heavy, broad, traction and non-skid tread is held to the cord body of the tire with Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords, a patented construction, making the cord body and tread an inseparable unit.



A leading university in 2350 tire tests has found that the new, scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up to 25% quicker. Its super-traction and non-skid efficiency have also been proved in the famous Pike's Peak Race where for eight consecutive years it has been used on the winning cars.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married.

There was nothing to be done. She had to go. She had to be married. They were in such trouble about money, she and Gary, that there was scarcely enough to buy her ticket to San Francisco, and when it came to her costume for the journey the problem was dreadful. Grandmother had forgotten about clothes for years. She was horrified when they came to contemplate Deborah's wardrobe. She wanted to write immediately to Boston and have a large selection of articles sent out, but Deborah convinced her that there was no time, and that they would have to manage with what was in the house. So they made a traveling costume from one of Grandmother's. It was quiet and reserved, although perhaps the lines were not such as a professional dressmaker would have put into it. It would serve.

The dress was made of brown cloth, very neat and plain. A hat was rather a problem, but they evolved one finally, a neat small black turban with a modest cluster of velvet pansies on one side. Grandmother said the hat was perhaps a little old-fashioned, but she said that Deborah was far too pretty to travel alone dressed too attractively. She cried when she said it, and warned Deborah again of the danger of speaking to strangers.

Grandmother sent only one other dress with Deborah; her own wedding dress. When they tried it on, it fitted perfectly. Deborah looked at herself in the glass, and then quickly back at Grandmother, with dark startled eyes.

"It's . . . it's . . ." she touched the neck.

"It is for your husband, my darling," Grandmother said gently, and Deborah's blood was cold again in her veins.

CHAPTER II

Tubby had finally finished dressing, and now, after a hurried trip across the city in Bryn's roadster, they stood waiting in the big parlor of one of the old and eminently respectable hotels. Age had not added to its prestige; it had gained nothing, through the passage of years, save a few extra layers of dust in the interiors of the sagging red plush chairs, a few more cracks in the elaborately frescoed plaster walls, a few more worn places in the thin carpet. Tubby, hands in pockets, stared unseeingly at the candle sconces on the wall, fitted now with weary electric bulbs which gave out barely enough light to disclose the dangling crystal ornaments on the sconces themselves.

The grandfather clock in the corner ticked slowly.

"You're crazy," Bryn murmured, and took out his watch.

"Me?" Tubby asked in amazement and sat down in a comfortable chair.

"The clock. It's slow. My watch says ten minutes to nine."

"Oh. So you were talking to the clock?"

"Merely a slip."

"Slip is right," Tubby muttered. "Talking to clocks!" Tubby went so far as to say that if Bryn, at the age of six, had not fallen upon him violently one day as they rolled off a roof together, he would not have bitten the end off his tongue and so begun a lisp which would endure to his dying day.

"Thlip ith right," Bryn repeated absently to himself. "Talkingh to clockth."

"Go to hell," Tubby said bitterly. He folded his hands before him.

There was a long silence.

"Bryn," Tubby said abruptly, and stopped.

"Tubby," Bryn answered politely.

"Bryn, what are you doing it for?"

"There isn't any reason why I shouldn't do it."

"Well," Tubby exploded, "you're not getting anything out of it. That's what I mean. You're getting into an awful mix-up with all kinds of possible consequences, and you're not getting anything out of it."

"Consequences?"

Tubby still sat in the big chair and considered, his blue eyes on Bryn's gray ones. "Pilar, for one. You'd make a very nice couple. That is . . ."

"Pilar would make a nice couple with anybody. And we've settled about her, so don't go back over that again, Tubby. Only there's a suggestion I'd like to make. If I were you I wouldn't rush over to Pilar's tonight right after the ceremony, because if you were to get down on your knees in my pants there would certainly be a catastrophe."

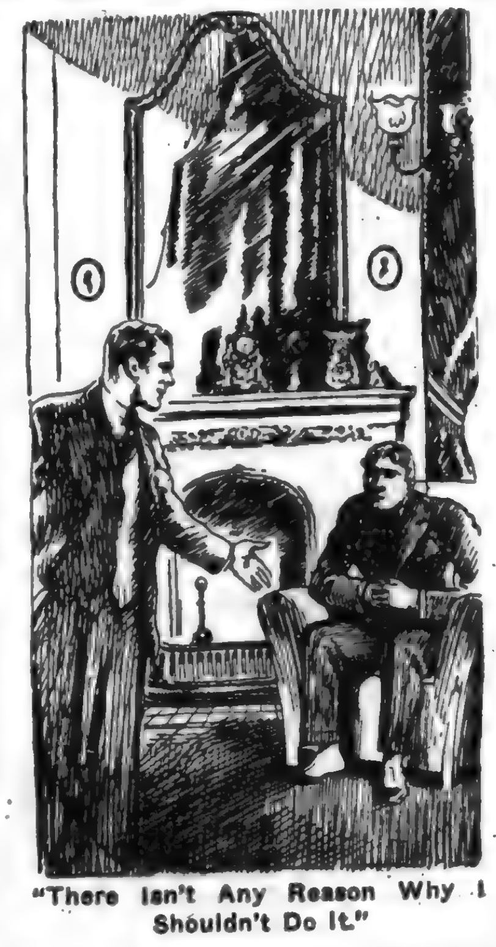
He stopped in front of the grandfather clock and gazed earnestly into its dingy face until Tubby had stopped making his spluttering noises. There was another long silence. Seven minutes to nine.

"What about this sailor, this Graham fellow?" Tubby demanded abruptly. "Do you think he's going to let any man crack him in the jaw and then marry his girl without doing anything about it? What about him?"

"Oh, he's all right," Bryn said lazily. "His enlisted time doesn't expire for two months. And he isn't much to worry over, anyway."

"Oh, Lord," Tubby said prayerfully, and put his head in his hands. Bryn went over and sat down beside him. He tweaked the yellow lock. "The whole trouble with you, Tubby, is that you're one of these sermons-in-stones people. I mean, you can't help looking for trouble. Why can't you take a thing at its face value and stop worrying? All that's happening is that I'm lending my name and my charming personality . . . because I have to win over the grandmother, too, perhaps I forgot to mention it . . . for a year. What's a year? The last pair of elephant tusks I brought home cost me a year, and I've been sick of the darn things for a long time. After all, an elephant tusk is not exactly a thing a man wants to look at more than two or three times a day, and it isn't a thing you ever get really fond of and like to cherish, you know."

Tubby raised his head. "Oh," he said ominously. "So you're planning to cherish this Deborah woman and get fond of her, are you? Now that I understand why you're marrying her, do you mind telling me why she is marrying you? It doesn't work both ways, you know. It couldn't be, even if it's what I'm beginning to think it might be."



"There Isn't Any Reason Why I Shouldn't Do It."

"But I told you why she's marrying me," Bryn said kindly. "I really explained it very nicely. She's marrying me to get a million dollars, one year from today when the conditions of the will are fulfilled and when her grandmother is convinced that I am no fortune-hunter and that I am a steady going young gentleman with no bad habits and the ability to make Deborah happy."

"Oh, no, she isn't," Tubby contradicted.

"Isn't she?"

Tubby straightened. He put his hand on Bryn's arm. "Look here, Bryn," he said, "what's the use of your trying to hold out on me? Why don't you come across with the whole story? I know what it is, anyway. It's another of those crazy quixotic notions of yours. What are you trying to put over now?"

"Nothing."

"You lie. The girl can't be marrying you to get her grandfather's money, because you're not Stuart Graham, and you said yourself that the will stated specifically that unless she married Graham and Graham only, on or before her birthday — today — she wouldn't get the money. Didn't you? And you're not Graham."

"Well," Bryn said at last, "not specifically. Not very specifically. I've read quite a few legal documents . . . this was a ferociously legal document, Tub, with a lot of whereases and in-as-muchases and party-of-the-second-parts, and that kind of thing. If Deborah's grandfather hadn't told me what it was that he intended, I wouldn't have been too sure."

"But is it ambiguous, after all the fuss? Why make a will like that and leave it ambiguous? Can the girl get around it? Marry anybody at all and still get the money?"

Hard Work

THERE is no real success in any pursuit in life without hard work. "I find," said Livingstone, the great missionary explorer, when addressing the spinners of Glasgow, "that all eminent men work hard. Eminent geologists, mineralogists, men of science, work hard, and that both early and late." It matters not what position a man may occupy, as a general thing, his labor will constitute the measure of his success. Eminence in any profession or calling is only attained by toil. There is hard, earnest, persistent work somewhere before this end is reached.

Postmaster General Farley claims his department is out of the red and that recovery has been accomplished. His words would carry more conviction if he would ask Congress to reduce letter postage from 3 cents to 2. There was universal 2-cent letter postage before the depression.

Are you going to sell your vote next November, and then tax yourself to pay back all you received, plus interest and your part of the money paid the "white collar higherup" for managing the collecting? Figuratively, they are giving you a dose of fish hooks in a capsule.—Ironton, Mo., Enterprise.

The House votes about two and a half billions for a relief budget, and the same body, after due consideration, declines to provide three billions in currency, by a process commonly known as inflation, for the benefit of farm indebtedness. The Senate pauses in the advance of the latest tax bill. Indeed, if it were not for money matters, Congress would be practically out of work. Money is said to be the root of all evil. That may or may not be true, but so far as the existing session is concerned, money seems to be the root of legislation.

Uncle Sam has a well known file called the Civil Service List. Aspirants for work get their names embodied in it and sometimes have a long wait. There is another roll which might be dominated the Uncivil Service List, composed of the names of public enemies. The latest Public Enemy No. 1, concerned in a kidnapping, kept that number less than a week. The police have him, and his chances of getting a job promptly appear to be good.

H. K. Schondelmayer,

On June 15, 1935, the United States was checking her war debt accounts and reported that one country out of thirteen had paid up. On the same date in 1934, the Senate ratified the Geneva movement for the limitation of the sale of war materials. That is deep enough to dig into the dry annals of the past. The big day is ahead. The fifteenth of June, 1936 will mark the beginning of the payment of the soldier's bonus, no serious obstacles having developed up to date. Few persons have determination enough to keep a diary for long. If the veterans are good diarists, it is to be feared that more than one journal will read: "June 15, 1936, got the bonus; June 15, 1937, broke again." And in many cases it will not be necessary to wait the year. In St. Joe at least, there will be a few of the boys who will provide homes for their families with their bonus payment, and this is a very creditable thing to do, and those who foolishly spend this money, would do so with even a meager wage earned.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION COUNCIL IN AUBURN

The meeting of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education Sunday afternoon in the Auburn First M. E. Church was well attended, every township with one exception being presented.

The county officers and department superintendents explained their programs for the coming year in which the organization was described as a building. A number of schools paid their apportionment for the year at Sunday's meeting and it is hoped that all in the county will do so before the state convention at Frankfort on June 9, 10, 11 so that DeKalb county will again be awarded a gold crown. Wolf Is Member of Dog Team; Huskies Make Him Behave

Rev. Father O'Dwyer of North Bay, Ont., a Sault diocese missionary, uses a wolf in the dog team that pulls his sled.

Snarls at the priest from the wolf invariably are silenced by the team leader, who administers a proficient beating. The wolf's night howls, however, often bring other wolves uncomfortably close, the missionary says.

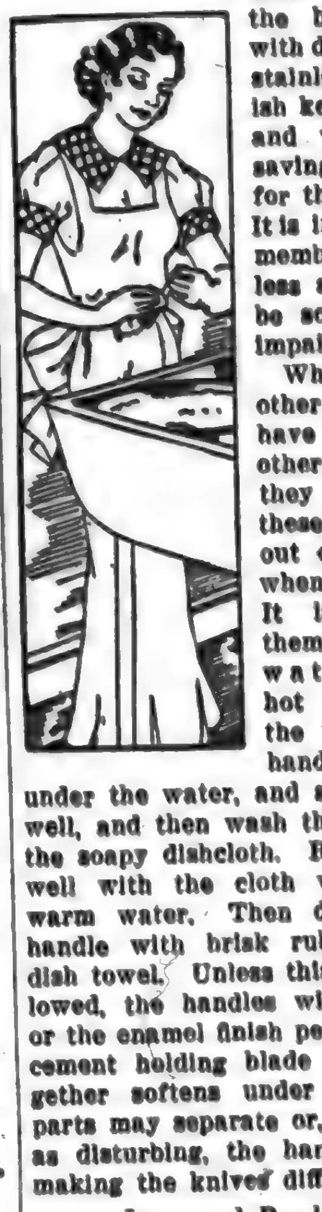
THE care of utensils used in the handling of foods, in kitchen and dining room apart from silver flatwear has undergone a change since stainless steel has come into use. No longer is the scouring brick needed for steel nor any of the granular substitutes for cleaning knives. No longer does the cutlery have to be rubbed until it shines like silver, and be wiped thoroughly dry, lest the blades darken with dampness. The stainless steel finish keeps its polish, and what a labor saving this means for the homemaker. It is important to remember that stainless steel must not be scoured as this impairs the finish.



When knives and other such utensils have handles of other substances, as they generally do, these should be kept out of water, even when washing them. It is ruinous to them to remain in water, especially hot water. Hold the utensils in the hand with blades under the water, and scrub the metal well, and then wash the handles with the soapy dishcloth. Rinse by wiping well with the cloth wet with clear warm water. Then dry blades and handle with brisk rubbing with the dish towel. Unless this method is followed, the handles will either crack, or the enamel finish peel off. Also the cement holding blade and handle together softens under heat, and the parts may separate or, what is almost as disturbing, the handles may warp making the knives difficult to use.

Ivory and Pearl Handles.

The choice and costly ivory and pearl handled knives and forks for table use are very susceptible to temperature, and few of the handsome antique pieces have weathered these changes. During the long years of use, sometimes they must have been carelessly washed. Long cracks in the exquisite old mellow-toned ivory tell the tale.

Celluloid handles though not choice, were once favored because while resembling ivory, they withstood the wear and tear of usage better. Genuine ivory was and is scarce, and expensive.

Havoc of Carelessness.

Carelessness plays havoc with a person's belongings, with the good looks of furniture, and all material things to say nothing of the ravages it can make into good health. Results of carelessness are everywhere present, so it behooves us to cultivate the habit of being careful. In doing this we have to keep a watch over ourselves to see that we do not become fussy in our attentions to things, nor over-critical of others' actions when they seem careless. There is a happy medium between being careless and critically careful.

One of the greatest causes of mishaps to materials and furnishings, is the prevalent habit of smoking cigarettes and laying stubs down while still glowing. It is not the smoking habit that is at fault, but the careless attitude toward the disposal of butts. Handsome table linens get seared or actually riddled with wee holes burnt through the cloth by cigarette sparks, stubs still a-light when laid down, or recklessly handled cigarettes. The frequency with which cigarettes are discarded and new ones lighted is much greater than when smoking cigars. Opportunity for accidents is magnified in the first instance.

Careful Management.

If the homemaker is careful she will have plenty of ash trays conveniently disposed in her rooms, and also provided for dinner or luncheon guests. Then it is gross carelessness on the part of smokers when accidents through cigarette smoking happen.

Edges of handsome tables are sometimes found marred by having the finish burnt off, and a careless smoker's desk is apt to be rimmed with burnt places. Cigarettes are laid down with the lighted ends well over the edge of the furniture. But, before the smoker realizes it the cigarette has burnt down to the edge, and the finish is off and the wood itself is charred.

Tailors will tell you of suits brought to them to have little burnt places mended, and invisible darning concerns make much of their money darning such places so they cannot be detected.

To Frame Pictures

Pictures for nursery or game room walls may be displayed in a new way by pasting them flat on the wall and tacking a narrow, half-round molding along the edge. They are then given a thin coat of varnish, and the molding is lacquered the desired color. The lacquer is best applied before nailing the molding to the wall with headless nails.

Ceiling Lore

Painting the ceilings in pastel colors gives a pleasing contrast, even when side walls are very light hues. To obtain the greatest reflection value from a ceiling, however, it should be painted a flat white.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Steel Drivin' Man

HOEL S. BISHOP, who knows the history of the Chesapeake and Ohio railroad backward as well as forward, and vice versa, has often heard the old-timers tell about the difficulties they had in driving a tunnel through Crusee mountain. Among the negro laborers they hired was a young fellow named John Henry, a likely lad only seven or eight feet tall.

Right away they discovered that John Henry was a mighty good hammer man, even though he hadn't got his growth yet. He was so fast with his 12-pound hammer that he wore out its handle every nine minutes. He always had to have a boy standing by with a pail of ice water so he could keep the hammer from melting.

The result of this was that the C. and O. had to hire a gang of Tony Beaver's lumberjacks to log off the whole state of West Virginia in order to provide John Henry with enough hammer handles to keep him busy. Also they had to make the Potomac river run backwards so there'd be enough water on hand to keep his hammer cool.

Just about the time John Henry began to wear out a handle every six and three-quarter minutes, a fellow showed up with a steam-driven drill and challenged John Henry to a drilling contest. "Boss man, how many days' staht you-all want so's I won't ketch up with yu' too soon?" asked John Henry. The steam drill man said they'd start at the same time, so at it they went. And, as everybody in the South knows, John Henry

Beat dat steam drill down.
Rock was high, po' John was low.
Well, he laid down his hammah an' he died,
Laid down his hammah an' he died.

It was too bad that the contest resulted fatally for the victor. If John Henry had ever grown up to be a full-size man, he might have hung up some real records as a steel drivin' man.

The Good Ship "Wobble"

THE first stories about the good ship "Wobble" were written by Frank Ward O'Malley and printed in the New York Sun, but other newspaper men have added details to its history. It was "O'Malley of the Sun," however, who first interviewed its master, Capt. Heinie Hassenpfeffer, and discovered that he wasn't quite sane. Captain Heinie had been a second story man in New York. When he sought new fields for his talents in Africa and found that the houses there were only one story high, the disappointment unbalanced his mind.

For that matter, his ship was a bit unbalanced also. It had only one paddle-wheel and that was mounted on the starboard side. So when the "Wobble" started out on a voyage with its cargo of subways and artesian wells, it just steamed around and around in a circle and never got anywhere.

To correct this defect Captain Heinie junked the engine and paddle-wheel, installed masts and sails and set out across the Atlantic. Four and a half days out, the ship ran into what seemed to be a dense black cloud. But the captain soon found that it was a flock of mosquitoes. By the time the "Wobble" had passed through them, the insects had eaten off every scrap of sail and tarred rope from the ship.

For a month the ship drifted with the tides. Off the coast of South America it again ran into a cloud of mosquitoes. By a queer coincidence it was the very same flock that had stripped the ship. Captain Heinie knew they were the same because every mosquito wore a pair of canvas overalls, made from his sails, held up by tarred rope suspenders!

A Shout for Bellow

AROUND Horse Cave, Kentucky, the natives will tell you somewhat pridefully that you'll never be able to get the best of Herman Bellow.

Herman's knowledge came from a study of nature in the numerous caverns of his neighborhood.

Once an Englishman visited Horse Cave, so the story goes, and engaged in argument with Herman. The result was a bet, the loser to be the man who couldn't answer his own question.

Said Herman: "Why is it a woodchuck leaves no dirt when he digs a hole?"

"That's your question," retorted the Englishman.

"Because he starts to dig the hole at the bottom instead of at the top," replied Herman proudly.

"But how does he get to the bottom?" the Briton wanted to know.

"That's your question!" cracked Herman Bellow.

The "Bad Lands"

"Bad Lands" is the name given in the western part of the United States to certain sterile regions. They are characterized by an almost entire absence of vegetation, and by the labyrinth of fantastic forms into which the soft strata of clays, sands and gravels have been carved through the action of wind and water. The best examples are found east of the Black hills in South Dakota, though similar formations occur in Wyoming, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico and Texas.

FARM WIVES OF TODAY HAVE MUCH MORE FREEDOM

With old-fashioned drudgery banished from her kitchen by modern equipment, and more than half her cooking hours lopped off by new facilities, today's farm wife is turning her attention toward greater cultural attainments and more recreation.

In all parts of the country, modern rural women are finding more time for educational pursuits, club life, reading, and numerous other activities that come with increased leisure time. Classes, both private and public, are attracting large numbers of these women who desire to acquire various arts and higher learning. In many places, the latest books and magazines, and literature of all types, are brought to rural communities in libraries on wheels, affording these areas the opportunities enjoyed by persons living near city libraries.

Much of this freedom from the farm kitchen is due to the development of the gasoline pressure stove which offers the rural resident all the advantages of the best city gas stoves. Where it formerly required hours of hard work for a farm woman to kindle a poky coal or wood fire and prepare a simple meal, she now takes only a few minutes to prepare any dish she likes. She has instant and intense heat at the strike of a match, and a simple turn of a valve gives her any cooking heat she desires.

Progressive rural women everywhere are enjoying hours of freedom their mothers scarcely dreamed of, and they are using those hours to attain richer, fuller lives for their own joy and the benefit of their families.

Sustain and Abstain

All philosophy lies in two words; "sustain" and "abstain."

Uncle Phil Says:

Cultivate Quietness

Quiet contemplation is something that needs cultivation among sane minds; a demand for constant excitement characterizes a nervous wreck.

It requires a good deal of sporting blood merely to carry on in a world of doubt and fear.

Nearly every man has another side to him. So there is that much to be said in his favor.

Gladness Measures Luck

When you have good luck in anything you ought to be glad. Indeed, if you are not glad, you are not really lucky.

The simp paints the town red; the misanthrope paints it blue; the knocker paints it black; the promoter paints in the color of gold.

Business of life is getting into trouble; the joy of life is getting out of it.

One Can Go Ahead

It is fortunate that a man can go ahead without stopping to convince everybody.

Jury trials are never quite safe, so long as there are so many people who want to quit and go home.

To put reason into boys' heads, you have first got to train them to understand it.

Anybody can appreciate a splendid sunset. It takes a scholarly mind to write poetry about it.

HONEYMOON MOUNTAIN

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married. Tubby and Bryn await Deborah in a hotel in Frisco. Over a period of one year the groom is to prove he is no fortune hunter and can make Deborah happy to the satisfaction of her grandmother. Otherwise the fortune is to go to charity. The will is somewhat ambiguous as to whom Deborah is to marry.

"Well," Bryn admitted slowly, "no."

"No? No? But . . ."

"But we told her she could. I told her. Holworthy told her. Of course, if she's gone off and tried marrying anyone else, he'd have been forced to explain to her that on second reading . . . and so on."

"So," Tubby said with the manner of a talkie villain.

"Well," Bryn said for the third time, "what of it? It gets her out of a jam, doesn't it?"

"And you pay over a million of your own dollars at the end of a year, and she gives you fifty thousand for your services. Is that the way it works, noble Sir Galahad?"

"Oh, I don't know. I think we can break the will. Holworthy's going to do his damnedest. And, if he can't . . . well, the money means quite a bit to her. If—when you meet her you'll understand a little better, Tub."

"Humph," Tubby said.

They both stood up. Bryn looked at his watch. Ten minutes past nine. The grandfather clock choked, muttered, cleared its throat and gasped out that it was nine o'clock.

"Just the same," Tubby said explosively, shaking down his trouser leg, "just the same, a year is too long. An ignorant, unsophisticated, dowdy backwoods country girl, who's never been anywhere or seen anything . . . milk and water, as uninteresting . . . after Pilar! . . ."

"Sh!" Bryn said quickly. He took three steps toward the door at the end of the long room. Tubby stood up, too. The door was opening.

A tall gentleman in black pushed the door open and held it. Behind him came Mr. Holworthy, his smile astonishingly serene and content. For years Mr. Holworthy had guarded Bryn's interests with the stern fidelity of the dragon who guarded the Golden Fleece; yet here he was, calm and undismayed, lending his arm and his moral support to this menace to Bryn's peace of mind, this girl who could wreak the most dire havoc in Bryn's affairs.

Tubby looked at the girl. He choked. Bryn stood without moving.

She was finishing a remark to Mr. Holworthy as she came through the door on his arm. Tubby did not hear the words, but he caught the melody of her voice. It was like that of a very young child, with an appealing break in it; one thought of small birds learning to sing, of hyacinths in spring gardens, of silver bells at twilight.

She was a very small girl as she stood hesitantly there. A very small girl, and she was dressed in white. Her skirt was so full that it stood around her in a circle, and only the tip of one tiny white slipper could be seen below it. She held it off the dusty carpet with the tips of careful fingers. The bodice was slim and pointed, and her waist could have been spanned by a man's two hands. There were little puffed sleeves below her white shoulders; the neck of the dress was low, and above it her throat was creamy white and soft. She had pinned rosebuds against it in front, after a hasty, flushed look into the mirror, and they lay pink and fragrant against her delicate flesh. Around her neck was a short strand of tiny pearls, and from her ears hung little round pearl drops. She looked like a miniature of one's grandmother, painted on her wedding day.

And her face?

A small white oval face, without a hint of color in the cheeks, but with a pair of the softest, reddest lips in the world. They were the kind of lips which look like the bud of a red rose when they say "no" and there was something about the firm little round chin which suggested that she might often say "no." Eyes like purple pansies, soft and velvety and dark; and as if eyes and lips and tiny hands in white lace mittens were not enough, her hair was of red gold, curling and breaking into a million misty tendrils around her face.

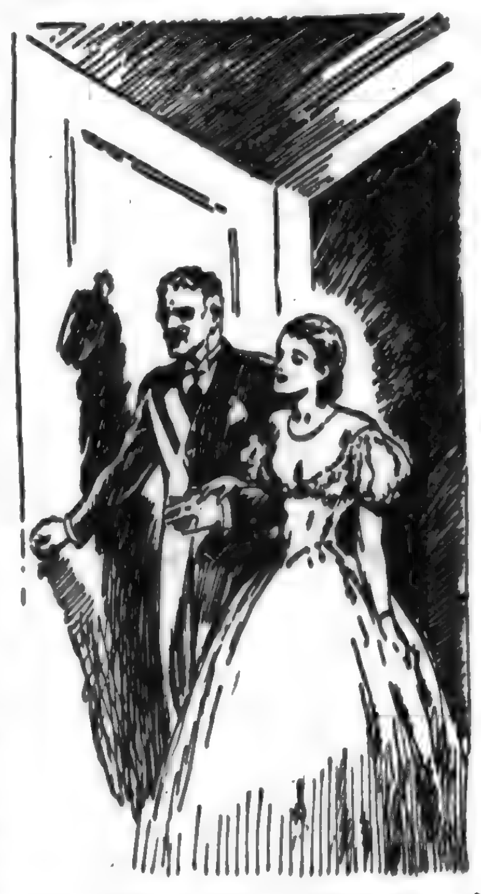
Tubby looked at Bryn. He drew a deep breath. "Noble Sir Galahad," he said under his breath, and moved forward to be presented.

* * * * * * *

Deborah was married and at home again. It was less than a week since she had gone away from the mountain, but it seemed a thousand years. She was so much older, now. She knew so much more than she had known a week ago that her thoughts were like the thoughts of a stranger; she looked at her old life and everything that had been in it with a stranger's eyes, clear, wondering, critical.

They were at luncheon, she and Grandmother and the man, seated at the long table in the middle of the vast shadowy dining room. The ceiling was high and supported by dark heavy oaken beams; at one end was a great fireplace with a carved oak mantelpiece and a stone hearth. The western wall was pierced by a row of six square casement windows shut with ivy. On the table stood the beautiful dulled old silver candelabra which had once been altar pieces in a cathedral; now they held the cheapest and most ordinary thick white candles whose flames wavered and burned coarsely and unevenly, and gave off a strong odor of impure wax.

Deborah sat up and moved the silver spoon beside her plate. She looked across at Grandmother. Grandmother was wearing her gray satin dress for the first time since Grandfather's death. Her white hair was pinned more loosely than usual, and fluffed out softly around her face. Her eyes were sparkling, alight, happy. There was pink in her cheeks, and a thread of it in her lips. It was as if she had come to life again, too. An hour ago, when they had come up the weed-grown drive, Grandmother had been standing at the side door, dressed from head to foot in the black she had worn for so long, with one hand pressed to her heart in the old familiar gesture, and a look of fearful questioning in her eyes. The man had stopped the big battered-looking motor-car, and helped Deborah out. Grandmother had not looked at Deborah at all, except for one quick encompassing glance as if to make sure that she was still intact. Her eyes had gone to the man, and he had stood tall and straight and smiling that faint steady smile of his, waiting. The sun had glinted on his brown hair, and had made his brown skin look very clear and wholesome. Grandmother had looked into his eyes for a long time, a tense, silent, searching look; and then she had drawn a deep breath and put out her hand. She had smiled back at him, a fluttering relieved happy smile, and he had taken both her little white hands in his own. Oh, he was living up to his bargain.



She Looked Like a Miniature of One's Grandmother.

He seemed to understand the situation at a glance and decide what it was he must do. It was perfect acting, and Deborah knew that she should have been grateful and appreciative, but instead she was angry. Angry because . . . well, because, watching him with Grandmother, she had realized suddenly that all the way up from San Francisco he had been acting with her, too, amusing her, making her laugh, telling her interesting things, thinking of her comfort, because it was part of the bargain. On the trip she had forgotten the bargain, the fact that he was going to be paid, and paid well, as he had expressed it, for giving their marriage the appearance of a happy one, the appearance of a real marriage between two young people who had . . . had fallen in love with each other at first sight.

Well, no matter; even if it was a little disconcerting to keep remembering what the true situation was. No harm had been done. She had been reserved through it all, and had not, she assured herself, allowed herself to be anything but impersonal with him. That was the note one must remember to strike: impersonality. Deborah straightened her shoulders and leaned back in her chair, calm, cool, in full control of herself.

Insects Chief Competitors

"Insects are as a group the most dangerous of all small living things. They are, in fact, man's chief competitors for the supremacy of the earth," according to entomologists.

Memorial Day

Cy Warman in the Indianapolis News.

Gather the garlands rare today,
  Snow-white roses and roses red;
Gather the fairest flowers of May,
Heap them up on the graves of clay,
  Gladden the graves of the noble dead.

Pile them high as the soldiers were
  Piled on the field where they fought and fell;
They will rejoice in their new place there
Today, as they walk where the fragrant air
  Is sweet with the scent of asphodel.

Many a time, I've heard it said,
  They fell so thick where the battles were,
Their hot blood rippled, and, running red,
Ran out like a rill from the drifted dead
  Staining the heath and the daisies there.

This day the friends of the soldiers keep,
  And they will keep it through all the years,
To the silent city where soldiers sleep
Will come with flowers, to watch and weep
  And water the garlands with their tears.

Day of Memories

FEW now survive from among those for whom Memorial day was particularly established. The ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are shattered. Younger men, veterans of later wars, take the place of those who wore the blue or gray from Bull Run to Appomattox, as symbols of the nation's strength in arms.

Forms of observance change with the times, but the underlying spirit of thankful remembrance remains ever fresh and unalterable. To those who first thought of setting apart a day each year for patriotic remembrance such an event as that now staged annually at Indianapolis or the baseball double header or the highways crowded with pleasure-seeking motorists would have been as inconceivable as the radio to an aborigine. But one likes to believe that these manifestations of American life do not in the least modify the nation's sense of devotion to the memory of those who have borne her arms to victory.

There is needed in these diverting and troublous days some special occasion when minds shall turn to the men who have dared to bare their breasts to an enemy in war, who have seen in their country's flag something more than a piece of bunting and been convinced that a nation worth founding was worth defending even at the expense of life and treasure. One hears much in these days of pacifism, of oaths solemnly taken never to bear arms in war, of the supposed mockery of popular government, the rise of dictatorships and the smashing of treaty pledges. One hears too little of the innumerable thousands of stanch American hearts which still believe in national honor, the Constitution and the causes for which men in the past have been proud to die.

A people ready to observe Memorial day is not one to give way to despair. Today we honor the patriot dead. We honor, no less, the living who are inspired by the example of those whose graves they decorate.

Where Our Troops Stopped

A RUGGED monument of war implements, mortar and stone, marking the extreme point of advance of the American army during the World war, still stands on a hill east of Busancy, France, years after it was constructed by American soldiers on Armistice day, 1918.

The monument not only marks the farthest advance of the American army on the western front during the World war—it also marks the ground where at least four major wars of history have ended.

The monument is composed of German war weapons, including helmets, rifles, bayonets, swords, barbed-wire, gray pieces of uniform, and two small field guns. Encrusted in mortar, the enemy's arms of war were permanently "bound," symbolizing American victory.

This spot has always known strife. In 1870 Moltke's Prussians crossed the Meuse near here and humbled the French under Napoleon III on this ground. That battle ended the Franco-Prussian war.

Battle cries echoed in the hills of Busancy little more than a half century earlier when Napoleon was terrorizing central Europe. Only a short distance away is Waterloo.

Richelieu, dictator of France in 1641, was crushed on this noted battlefield by a combination of French and Spanish forces, and the Swedes journeyed to this battle ground at an earlier date, ending a bloody conflict with the Franks.

The Unknown Soldier

UNDER the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, where an eternal flame is kept burning, is the grave of the Unknown Soldier of France. Surrounded by a grille and a roped enclosure in the floor above, Great Britain's Unknown Soldier lies at rest, under the nave of Westminster Abbey. Italy's Unknown Soldier is buried beneath the altar of Victor Emmanuel monument in Rome.

Household Questions

To prevent cheese becoming stringy when making Welsh rabbit, do not use a high temperature when melting. Have only just enough heat to melt cheese.

* * *

To prevent halibut falling to pieces while boiling, wrap in cheesecloth and simmer in boiling water. About 30 minutes' time is required to boil two and a half or three pounds of halibut.

* * *

Always make it your business to keep your larder supplied with about a dozen cans of soups, meats and fruits. When an unexpected guest arrives for lunch, you will then be able to serve a good meal.

* * *

A saucerful of quicklime placed in a damp closet or cupboard, will absorb all dampness.

Potatoes need to be hilled to prevent the tubers from greening. Some gardeners make the mistake of hilling such root crops as beets, carrots, onions and parsnips, thus retarding their growth.

Smiles

True to Life

She—I'm awfully glad you've got a part in the Dramatic society's next show. Have you much to say?

He—Practically nothing. I'm playing the part of a husband.

Just Cautious

"Then you won't have a garden wedding?"

"No; I'll take no chances of having my wedding called on account of rain."

Ask Us Another

Teacher—What tense is, "I am beautiful?"

Class (in unison)—Past tense.

Small Kindnesses

LET the weakest, let the humblest remember, that in his daily course he can, if he will, shed around him almost a heaven. Kindly words, sympathizing attentions, watchfulness against wounding men's sensitiveness—these cost very little, but they are priceless in their value. Are they not almost the staple of our daily happiness? From hour to hour, from moment to moment, we are supported, blest, by small kindnesses.

The actions of faith and mercy are sure to repay the merciful.—Magoon.

A Boomerang

An American and an Irishman were walking together one day when they passed a gallows.

"And where would you be, Mike," said the man from the States, "if the gallows over there had their due?"

"Walking alone," said Mike quietly.

Qualified

"Is this your ball in the garden, sonny?" asked the gardener.

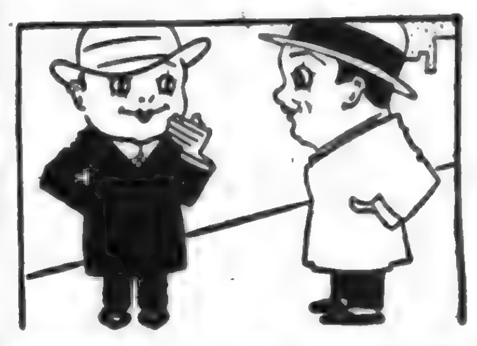
The small boy looked worried.

"Are there any windows broken?"

"No."

"Ah, then it is my ball!"

WANTS ACTION



"Wouldn't you like to see the lion and the lamb lying down together?"

"Me for the bear and the bull."

BARBERS

A would-be king will sit in a hot, fast-moving throne when the 500-mile race starts at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway on May 30. For Kelly Petillo, last year's sensational winner, has willed his seat to George "Doc" MacKenzie and has put the matter strictly up to the be-whiskered youth from Pennsylvania who has sworn never to remove his goatee until he gets the checkered flag on the famous Hoosier oval. His title as Eastern racing champion keeps the barbers in high hope.

HARD-LUCK TIMOTHY JONES

By STANLEY CORDELL

© Associated Newspapers.—WNU Service.

TIMOTHY JONES stood on the corner of Third and Market streets and thought of his luck. Bad luck had dogged Timothy's footsteps always.

At first Timothy hadn't been willing to admit that a man's fortune was regulated by any force outside his own making.

He had believed that if he grinned in the face of so-called bad luck, if he refused to give up hope and kept trying to do his best—that was what counted.

He had consoled himself with this belief when his father was injured in a railroad accident, and the responsibility of the family fell onto his shoulders.

He had continued to believe in it when Michael O'Reilly sold him the oil stock and two months later he discovered it was valueless.

He thought of it when he lost his job in the iron foundry the day after his marriage to Kitty O'Toole.

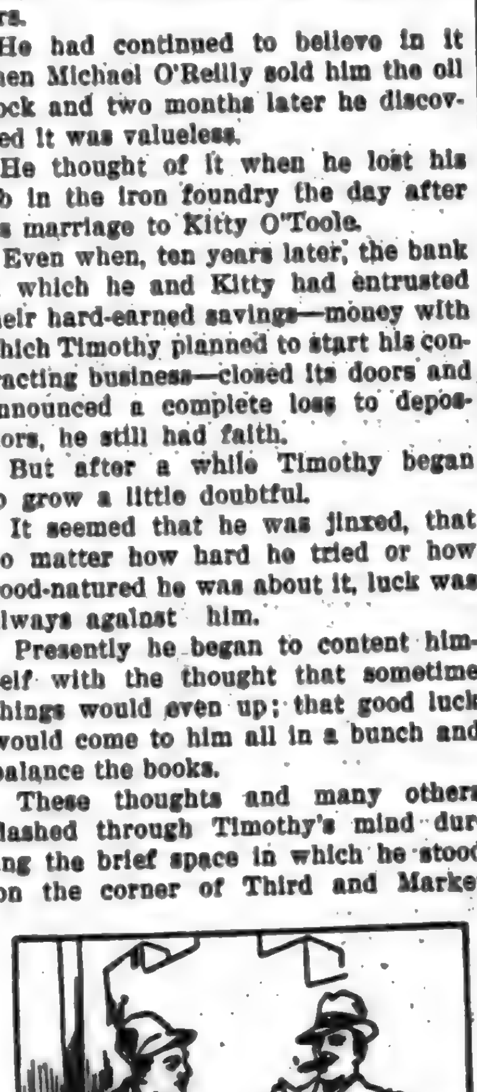
Even when, ten years later, the bank in which he and Kitty had entrusted their hard-earned savings—money with which Timothy planned to start his contracting business—closed its doors and announced a complete loss to depositors, he still had faith.

But after a while Timothy began to grow a little doubtful.

It seemed that he was jinxed, that no matter how hard he tried or how good-natured he was about it, luck was always against him.

Presently he began to content himself with the thought that sometime things would even up; that good luck would come to him all in a bunch and balance the books.

These thoughts and many others flashed through Timothy's mind during the brief space in which he stood on the corner of Third and Market streets waiting for the lights to flash green.



"I'll Take That Ticket," He Said. "And Here's Your Five Bucks."

As he stood there some one touched him on the shoulder. A flashily dressed man was regarding him pleasantly.

A vague sense of recognition came to Timothy and he nodded.

"Tim," said the flashily dressed man, "have you got five dollars in your pocket?"

Tim's face grew dark, but almost instantly brightened.

"I can let you have a couple of bucks," he said. "If you'll tell me your name and write out an I. O. U."

But the flashily dressed young man smiled and shook his head. "Tim, these tickets will cost you five bucks each. And if you draw the lucky one, you'll get twenty-five grand in return. They're horserace tickets, Tim."

Tim threw back his head and laughed.

He laughed loud and long, while the flashily dressed man stood patiently by.

Presently Timothy sobered a bit and wiped the tears from his eyes.

"Mister," he said, "you've made a mistake. You're talking to Timothy Jones, Hard-luck Timothy Jones, the man who's carried a jinx with him since childbirth, the man who never had a stroke of good fortune in his life. Why, anyone will tell you that."

The flashily dressed man shrugged, and none of the pleasantness left his face.

"O. K., Hard-luck Timothy Jones," he said. "Some one's going to win that twenty-five grand and I thought maybe it might be you."

The light turned green and Timothy stepped down from the curb.

And then all in a flash the idea came to him.

A sort of hunch, a premonition.

This was his chance, his hour of reckoning; this the breaking of his streak of ill luck, the paying back all in a bunch, the evening up.

He turned and tapped the flashily dressed man on the shoulder.

"I'll take that ticket," he said. "Yes, sir, I'll take it, and here's your five bucks."

A moment later, on the opposite side of the street, Timothy knew a sense of regret.

He looked down at the ticket in his hand and read the name of the horse written thereon: Nebraska.

A frown came to his face. He had been a fool to spend that five dollars, a fool to believe that anything could break his jinx. He must have been crazy! And money so scarce, too. What would Kitty say . . .?

Timothy stuffed the ticket into the hip pocket of his pants and began to hurry.

The clock on the corner told him he had but five minutes.

But he reached Moriarity's lumber yards with a minute to spare, was on the job at the second stroke of seven.

Grave faced, Big Mike Sullivan thrust his head from the shanty-office and shouted Timothy's name. Timothy crossed the yard and grinned in that way he had which made men like Big Mike regret sometimes that they were foremen, because ofttimes a foreman is forced to perform distasteful tasks.

"An' it grieves me to be havin' to tell ye this, Tim," Big Mike was saying, "but it's Mr. O'Rourke that made me do it. Business is poor, he says, an' we'll be havin' to lay off some of the boys. Just temporarily, he says. As soon as things are after gettin' better, they'll all be back agin. . . ."

Still Timothy didn't give up hope.

He started out the next morning to hunt for work.

He tried every lumber yard and iron foundry and coal dealer in town.

Then he began with the contractors and the small shops and even the railroad. But everywhere it was the same.

No one was hiring; men were being laid off by the dozens.

It was a pretty discouraging business, unless you had a stout heart and the courage of Timothy Jones.

But even Tim presently began to smile less and to cease his hearty talk and bluff ways.

Their money was nearly gone and Kitty was going to have a baby. Unless something turned up pretty quick, Timothy would have to swallow his pride and appeal to the welfare, and that to a man who valued his independence and boasted of his abilities was something worse than torture.

Another week passed and Timothy suddenly realized it was spring. Always before, spring had meant something, but now it was different. There was little about it to gladden the heart or raise the spirits.

Toward the end of April, Timothy was passing a street corner where newspapers were on display, and his eye chanced to fall on the headlines of a sporting sheet.

Idly he read them through and memory stirred within him. Instinctively he reached down deep in the hip pocket of his trousers and found there the strip of pasteboard for which he had paid five dollars.

It had remained there forgotten and neglected.

Holding it in his hand, Timothy heard once more the voice of the flashily dressed man: "If your horse wins, my boy, you'll get twenty-five grand."

Timothy's heart leaped.

He bought a copy of the paper and read all about the race.

Tomorrow was the big day.

Nebraska was a favorite. His chances were good.

Timothy went home, feeling better than he had in a month, conscious of an inner excitement which he had difficulty in suppressing. Before his door he stopped short, for there stood the flashily dressed man, smiling as pleasantly as ever.

"Tim," said the flashily dressed man, "it looks like you've picked a favorite. I can get you $1,000 cash for that ticket, if you'll take it."

But Tim shook his head and laughed.

"Well, no," he said. "No, I guess not. I play my hunches, mister."

And he went on into the house.

Tim didn't sleep much that night.

The next morning he walked the streets, half-heartedly looking for a job.

At noon he spent a nickel for a cup of coffee and another nickel for a bowl of thin soup.

At one o'clock he joined the crowd in front of the loud speaker outside Ryan's radio store.

At three o'clock he heard the starting of the race, and minutes later he heard its finish. Something in him seemed to turn off and go plop.

The announcer's voice droned out the names of the winners, eventually mentioning the name of Nebraska.

Nebraska had come in sixth!

Hard-luck Timothy Jones turned away, thrust his hands deep into his pockets, and went whistling down the street.

Poland Returns Compliment, Naming Streets for Wilson

Place names usually flow from an old country to a newer one as part of the cultural baggage of immigration. This is the reason the map of America is sprinkled generously with names of foreign cities and provinces.

America is not supposed to have made any contributions of this kind to the Old World, but apparently that tide, too, is turning. At least, it has in Poland where a recent compilation shows that there are no fewer than 30 streets, parks and squares in that country named after the late President Wilson. Almost every city in Poland does honor in this fashion to the man to whom the Poles feel so indebted for their liberty. Similarly, there are several streets in Polish cities named after George Washington.

Poland is returning a compliment which the United States has long been paying her. No less than 12 of our states have communities that bear the name of Warsaw, and Minnesota boasts two Warsaws, one in Goodhue county and one in Rice county. There is Polonia in Roseau county, and Posen in St. Louis county. America has many memorials to Poland in its geographic names and it is a gratifying thought that a like gesture is being made over there.

Origin of Mascot

The word "mascot" was brought into prominence by Audran's comic opera, "La Mascotte," in 1880. The derivation is somewhat uncertain, though it has a very close analogy to the Provencal masco, a sorceress or witch. It has also been traced to the French term, "ne masque," said of a child born with a membrane or caul over its face, which was regarded by the ancients as being extremely lucky.

Sao Miguel

Wine Barrels Are Carried Under the Carts.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

SAO MIGUEL of the Azores islands is turning from oranges to pineapples as its chief source of wealth. Excellent oranges are still grown, but since the island lost the British market a few years ago, pineapple culture has occupied agriculturists.

Natives of Sao Miguel hope to develop their island into an "Isle of Pines" which will provide a good part of Europe with practically all its fresh supply of pineapples.

An Englishman, a skilled horticulturist, arrived at Sao Miguel more than eighty years ago to lay out the famous Jose do Canto gardens. It was he who brought the first pineapples to his employer's hothouse. Twenty years later the fruit was shipped to England, each pine in its pot selling for two guineas. England and Germany are now the chief consumers of Azorian pines, France and continental Portugal following.

The plant, which is here of the smooth-leaved Cayenne variety, is grown under glass, special beds of fermenting heath or some other mountain shrub being provided. All the plants are brought to blossom at the same time by a process of smoking, the value of which was accidentally discovered many years ago when a carpenter, working in one of the pineapple houses, chanced to set fire to a pile of shavings. To the surprise of the grower, the plants, instead of being spoiled, burst into flower. By this method practically all the plants in a hothouse can be marketed at the same time, many months earlier than formerly.

Little glass houses shimmer on emerald slopes in various sections of Sao Miguel, the exclusive producer of pineapples in this archipelago. Wrapped in cellophane or packed in excelsior and crated, the fruit is shipped to the European market by a fleet of three vessels owned by the growers. In 1934 about 2,000,000 pines, worth half a million dollars, were exported.

Tea, Too, Is Grown There.

Another exotic industry on this island is the production of black and green tea, which here retains its oriental name, "cha." Ever since they discovered the sea route to India and planted their settlements as far afield as Macao (Macau), on the coast of China, the Portuguese have been a tea-drinking nation.

There is an old belief that tea is better if it has not crossed the sea. Whether this is true or not, Azorian tea tastes to some much like the far eastern variety on its native soil. It is consumed locally and shipped to other parts of Portugal.

A number of Chinese were originally imported as instructors in the tea culture, but now only native labor, chiefly female, is employed. The plantations dot the hillsides on the northern side of the island, which has greater moisture than the south coast. The stiff little evergreen shrubs stand in precise rows, very foreign in appearance, contrasting strangely with the familiar European flora about them.

A motor road parallels the coast of Sao Miguel, with connecting crossroads, enabling the traveler to see much of beauty and interest, even in one day ashore, including trips to the two largest volcano craters.

On the country roads are slow-swaying bullock carts, with woven-willow bodies filled with heath for the pineapple houses. Some are of archaic pattern, with solid wheels of the Roman type, their approach heralded by a complaining, creaking "song."

Sao Miguel has a deliciously green and restful countryside. Checkerboard fields, brown and green, alternate with woods filled with songbirds. These islands, like those of the Madeira and Canary groups, are the habitat of the wild canary of greenish-gray hue. Its glad note is one of the pleasantest features of the Azores, where it seems to be more generous and more vocal than on the islands farther south.

Near every stone cottage stands a corn rick where brownish maize in the husk is hung to dry. It forms the staple cereal crop of the islands. Fava beans (broad beans) and yams are grown and are leading articles of export.

In the Crater of a Volcano.

Skirting pine-clad cliffs, a road climbs to a misty, heather-clad tableland; then descends into Furnas valley, shut in by towering green walls. Were it not for the puffs of steam ascending from its many boiling sulphur springs, it would be difficult to believe that this peaceful vale is the crater of a mighty volcano which more than once poured out its molten lava and which still speaks through vents in the hot sulphur-stained crust around the springs.

It is a beautiful picture from the heights, this quiet, sheltered valley with its long, narrow village meandering like a stream through woods and meadows. The lake, on a raised platform of the crater, lies some distance from the settlement, which is a favorite summer resort.

Prescott, the famed historian, came to Furnas as a young man to visit at the summer home of his grandfather, first American consular officer in Sao Miguel, who was appointed in 1795 by President Washington.

Furnas has a thermal establishment, where sulphur and iron baths are available. Near-by fountains supply various kinds of mineral water, the place being noted for the diversity of its waters and the proximity of hot and cold springs.

One deep, cavelike caldron, belching forth boiling mud and steam, is called "The Mouth of Hell." Its evil appearance and the strong smell of sulphur give the impression that this is really an entrance to the abode of His Satanic Majesty.

Stately manorial houses, erected centuries ago, are to be seen throughout Sao Miguel, usually set on the heights. One such house, built in 1724, is a delightfully romantic old place. The big stone-paved kitchen has a chimney-place which is a room in itself. Standing in it, beside the huge brick hearth, one can look up the wide chimney, which towers above the house, to a patch of blue sky. Such chimneys are a distinctive feature of Azorian houses.

Life of the Inhabitants.

The upper class of Ponta Delgada leads a pleasant life, quiet as compared with the stress of American cities. There is a social club where dancing is a favorite pastime; a coliseum seating 2,600; a sports field for football, tennis, croquet, and handball; a baseball park; and an open-air sea pool built in the rocks by the shore.

There are motion pictures twice a week, chiefly from Hollywood. American influence is apparent in the English spoken throughout the Azores. There seems to be a genuine liking for the United States. The Stars and Stripes are in evidence at every festival. During the World war, Ponta Delgada was an American naval base.

Economically self-contained, the Micaelenses are no less independent when it comes to their social pleasures. In their amateur shows the scenery is apt to be painted locally, the costumes made in the homes of the young men and women who participate. In their singing, dancing, and acting these young people exhibit amazing talent and poise.

The young folks mingle in crowds, but there is here no such free and easy companionship among them as exists in the United States. The chaperon is still in vogue and "balcony courtship" is carried on with its own prescribed etiquette, the girl leaning over the second-story balcony to talk with her admirer on the street below.

The finest sight on the island is the crater of Sete Cidades (Seven Cities). The view from the rim is magnificent. The cup-shaped crater is nearly ten miles in circumference and holds, besides a lake with a hamlet on its shore, pastures and cultivated fields and three volcanic cones due to subsequent eruptions.

Owing to varying depths and deposits, the lake, shaped like the figure 8, and sometimes spoken of as two lakes, is vividly green at one end, brilliantly blue at the other.

The Lindberghs, on their aerial odyssey from Greenland's icy mountains to the steaming jungles of the Amazon, swooped down over this secluded lake.

There are many among the poor of the Azores who have suffered since money orders have ceased to arrive from Manoel or Antonio, who formerly prospered in Providence or New Bedford. The Azorian assets are a stout heart, a willing hand, a productive soil, and a climate which, though damp and rainy six months of the year, is without extremes of temperature.

Wages are low, but food is cheap. The main diet of the peasant consists of soup of cabbages, beans and potatoes, white cornbread, and fish. Pork and beef are only for special occasions, such as religious holidays. In the Ponta Delgada market 60 small fish sell for two and a half cents; a pound of green peas for less than two cents. A fresh live lobster, which is only for the well-to-do, costs 25 cents.

Find Roman Ruins in Bavaria

A Roman temple, the third of its type, has been unearthed near Regensburg, in southern Bavaria. Coins found when a wall was excavated in an orchard at Ziegetsdorf, in this neighborhood, proved to hail from the Second and Third century after Christ, and inscriptions were discovered establishing beyond doubt that the wall had formed part of a temple dedicated to the god Mercury.

WILL MARK SITE OF AARON BURR'S PLOT

Blennerhasset Island to Be Site of Memorial.

Chicago.—Historic Blennerhasset island in the Ohio river, rich in early American lore, is to be converted into a park as the fulfillment of a lifelong ambition.

Amos Kilgore Gordon, Standard Oil official, who roamed the island 50 years ago as a boy, recently added the remainder of the island to the 40-acre farm that had been in possession of his family since 1827, says the Chicago Tribune.

Gordon said the historical traditions of the island interested him when he was a boy. Largest and most fertile in the Ohio river, the island became the home of Harmon Blennerhassett, wealthy Irish immigrant who came to America in 1797 to escape the turmoil in Ireland. Blennerhassett's became far-famed as a "paradise in the Ohio."

Burr Visited Island.

It was there that Aaron Burr in 1806, just out of office as Vice President of the United States, met Blennerhassett and interested him in a scheme for creating an empire in the West.

Blennerhassett, tired of scholarly seclusion at his retreat, joined the conspiracy. He furnished boats and provisions for an expedition and traveled with Burr in the South and West attempted to raise a following.

But disaster soon overtook the expedition. In 1806 President Thomas Jefferson issued a warning to citizens against Burr's designs and demanded that he be brought to justice.

In December of the same year, Cowles Mead, secretary of the Mississippi territory, issued a proclamation for the arrest of the conspirators.

Blennerhassett, financially ruined, sought refuge in one place and then another. Finally, despairing of repairing his fortunes in this country, he went to Montreal, then to England and finally to the Island of Guernsey, where he died in 1831.

Noted for Beauty.

In 1827, Gordon's grandfather, George Neal, Jr., bought 140 acres on the island when the Blennerhasset estate was settled. Recently, at Parkersburg, W. Va., Gordon purchased the remaining acres on the island.

During the Civil war the island alternately was in the hands of Union and Confederate soldiers. A large hollow sycamore tree, estimated to be 400 years old, was used by soldiers in hiding.

Even in Colonial days, when George Washington surveyed land in the vicinity and patented a farm nearby, in what was called "Washington's bottoms," the island was a noted beauty spot.

Essentially, Gordon says, it is the same today, and when cleared will be a noteworthy landmark of early American development. He plans to open the park to visitors.

To Hunt for Gold Table Aboard Sunken Galleon

La Plata, Mo.—Two Missourians are planning a trip in search of a 3,800-pound gold table which they believe was aboard a galleon reported to have been sunk in the Caribbean sea about four centuries ago.

Lester Dent, fiction writer, and Kenneth Sien will sail in Dent's 50-foot schooner, in which the owner made a similar trip several years ago.

The story on which they base their hope for recovery of $1,500,000 in gold is that the Spanish governor of Cuba, called back to Spain to answer charges of plotting against Christopher Columbus, took all the gold available and had it cast into a table, which he took on board his ship.

Dent believes the boat on which the governor sailed sunk in shallow water off a small coral island.

If the expedition fails, Dent plans to go to Honduras to search for Inca silver.

Taunts of Girls Cause 50 Murders in Kenya

Nairobi, Kenya Colony.—The taunts of native girls, who tell their admirers first to get blood on their spears before courting, has been responsible for 50 murders in the Samburu district in recent months, headmen told a British officer sent to investigate.

The only solution, headmen said, was to "marry them off young." But early marriage is forbidden by the age-grade law, called Ilkileko.

The officer left 15 policemen, to be supported by the headmen, until the murderers are produced. As the headmen's annual incomes average $15, swift justice is expected.

Duckbill Platypus Brings Owner Fame

Washington—Ellis S. Joseph, 300-pound dealer in strange and rare animals, is famed as the only man who ever brought a duck-bill platypus into captivity.

Aside from this, Joseph once presented an Australian city with the largest chimpanzee in captivity, knows every corner of the earth by heart, and virtually can name every animal that inhabits them.

He has walked from one coast of Africa to the other collecting animals and reptiles.

Born in Bombay and educated in China, Joseph is an Australian citizen.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

John Golden, the proprietor, was in an anecdotal mood recently and told a story concerning the late Charles Frohman. Years ago, in London, Mr. Frohman stopped at the Savoy. The first morning after his arrival, he rang for a waiter and explained that he wanted his morning meal served always at eight o'clock and that it was to consist of half a grape fruit, two eggs boiled two and a half minutes, toast and coffee. He also informed the waiter that he didn't care for conversation early in the morning and wasn't interested either in the weather or politics. Each morning, the waiter arrived on the minute with the breakfast at just the right temperature, served it silently and departed silently. For two weeks, the same thing continued and so impressed with the service was Mr. Frohman that he continued to talk long after his return, of the one perfect waiter he had encountered in all his travels.

* * *

One morning—it was Mr. Frohman's birthday—there came a knock at his door and when he said, "Come in," much to his surprise in walked that same English waiter with the usual Frohman breakfast. The waiter served it silently and departed silently just as he had back in London. Not until later did Mr. Frohman learn that his fellow producer, Charles Dillingham, had arranged to transport the waiter from London to New York as a birthday present to Mr. Frohman. The waiter continued in Mr. Frohman's service until he died, some years later. Then he entered Mr. Dillingham's employ and was in charge of the house until after Mr. Dillingham married.

* * *

Mr. Golden told the story at luncheon in one of the larger hotels. Finding he had forgotten his glasses, in his usual spontaneous manner, he borrowed a pair belonging to the head waiter. Having adjusted them, he looked at the owner.

"There," he said, "is the perfect waiter Mr. Frohman found in London."

When the 100 or more policemen, who work under Deputy Inspector Joseph Bannon, moved out of the Arsenal station in Central park recently to another building in the park farther up town, they left behind a building older than the park itself. The arsenal was built by the state in 1848 as a depository for arms and ammunition. At that time it was in what was practically a wilderness. In 1856, the city purchased the arsenal and the land surrounding it and during the war between the states, it was used to house troops. Then it became a police station as well as headquarters of the park department. Now it is being used solely by the park department.

Discoveries are always being made. Ed Hart, finding his lighter dry, filled it accidentally with a highly advertised cold remedy. Seemingly it works just as well as ordinary lighter fluid though it is a bit more expensive.

Maybe a press agent story is o. k. today. A bright young man had a wealthy client who never had done anything worth a single line of publicity. So the press agent undertook a lot of digging and finally assembled a bunch of good, harmless stories to which the name of his boss could be attached. Before he could place any, his employer became blond-involved and hit the tabloids with a bang. So the press agent not only lost his job but also has a file of stories ready for a new name.

Robert Van Rosen, scenic designer, was recently presented with a Tibetan sacrificial dagger by Prof. Nicholas Roerich, of the Roerich museum. It contains one large dagger, two small dirks and a blood wiper. Semi-precious stones ornament the scabbard. Collectors place a value of more than $5,000 on the ancient weapon. The original owner is said to have killed more than 400 men with it. Van Rosen keeps it in his home. I wouldn't.

Quintuplets Get Table Designed in Star Form

Tamaqua, Pa.—A table in the form of a star, designed and built by J. E. Dyer of Frackville, near here, has received recognition from Dr. Allan Roy Dafoe, doctor for the Dionne quintuplets, in their behalf.

Doctor Dafoe expressed his appreciation of the unique table in a letter to Dyer.

Dyer built the table like a star so that each of the quintuplets would have her place apart from the others, and designated the places the girls were to occupy by inlaying a gold letter on each offset.

Air Travel Luggage Is Becoming Streamlined

Leipzig.—The newest aerial luggage is streamlined and combines unusual strength with lightness. The corners and edges of the new baggage are so constructed that they will return to their original shape after the roughest usage. All forms of new air luggage are seamless and ingeniously designed to fit snugly together to occupy the smallest possible space when aloft. In place of the conventional locks and hinges, the bags and trunks are equipped with zipper fasteners running completely around their circumference.

Taxation's High Toll

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

That government is best which governs least.

This was one of the axioms of our sturdy Americans of earlier generations. It's being forgotten today. Americans are getting a lot more government than their fathers got. And they're paying a lot more for it, too.

How much more? A recently published long-range study of governmental costs offers some interesting answers. It shows, for example:

That in 1850 approximately one cent out of every dollar earned in the United States was spent on the upkeep of government—federal, state and local.

That by 1900 the proportion had risen to six cents out of every such dollar.

That by 1929 government was taking twelve cents out of the dollar.

And finally:

That by 1934 the toll had mounted to nineteen cents out of each income dollar.

Nor is that the entire story. Actually, government is spending more than it collects—and has been doing so for years. In 1934, the figures reveal, it spent approximately 35 cents out of every dollar earned by its citizens. The difference, of course, helped swell public debt.

What is the effect of this rising toll on the productive enterprise of our country? Let's consider it.

Money spent by government is, in general, unproductive. Seldom does it create new opportunities for lasting employment. But money spent in private enterprise—in building homes, in expanding stores, in operating farms or factories—creates new wealth, new opportunities, new jobs.

To divert great sums from productive enterprises and individual pay envelopes into the hands of government spenders is, therefore, to limit every citizen's opportunity not only to work and earn, but to enjoy the full fruits of his toil. It is a barrier to re-employment.

America enjoyed its greatest expansion when government was economical, and taxation small. It cannot recapture that swift progress so long as it is handicapped by a millstone of official extravagance and waste. Economy in government is, therefore, far more than a popular demand. It is an essential to both the progress of our nation and the prosperity of its people.

Super Liner Queen Mary's Kitchen

The largest electrically equipped kitchen in the world.

FOOD of the finest quality prepared by expert chefs to delight the palate of the "Gourmet" will be provided for the thousands of passengers on the Cunard White Star Line's "Queen Mary," as she races swiftly across the Atlantic.

The main restaurant is the largest room ever built in a ship. It is 160 feet long and is so large that the steamship company's first transatlantic liner, "Britannic," could be placed within it.

There is intense rivalry in the transatlantic trade for supremacy of the sea. This rivalry extends not only to the speed of the ship but to her equipment and the service to passengers. For this reason, the designers of the "Queen Mary" have placed particular emphasis on her culinary department and have equipped her with what are perhaps the largest completely electrified kitchens in the world.

Here is the last word in Modern Kitchens constructed on a vast scale. Gleaming porcelain enamel ranges, supplied with pure electric heat, and polished metal working surfaces combine to give assurance of cleanliness.

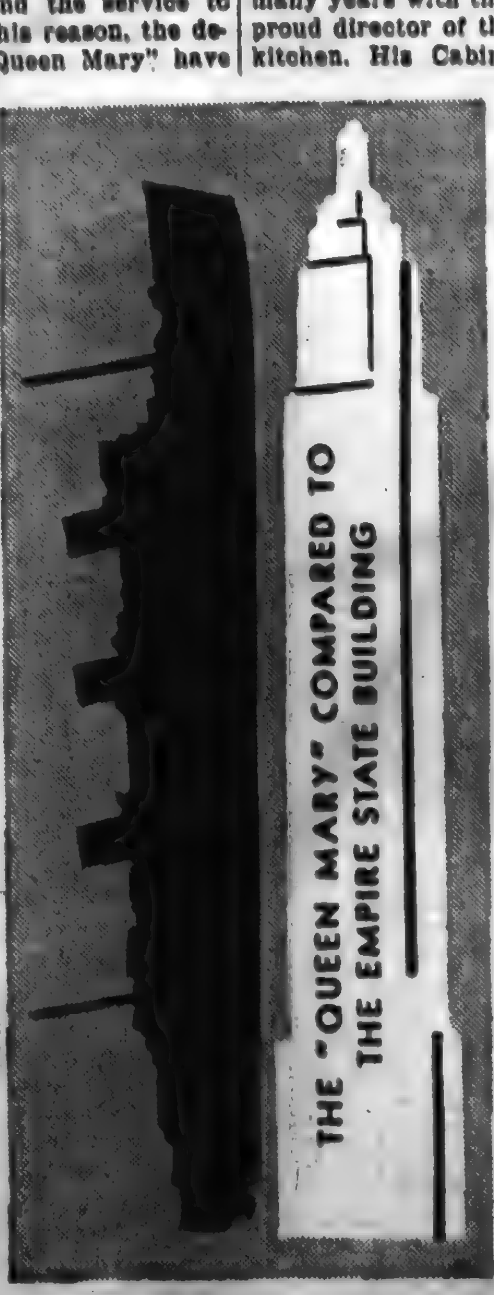
The ship's kitchens would delight the heart of any housewife for they contain every sort of electrical labor saving device. Imagine the complete elimination of such laborious tasks as potato peeling and dough mixing. Machines take care of both operations on the "Queen Mary." Every conceivable electrical device for kitchen efficiency is to be found on the ship, from orange juice extractors to huge ice cream freezers.

Raoul Ricoult, born in Mayenne, France, 54 years ago, is the chef who directs her staff of cooks and bakers. M. Ricoult had completed his apprenticeship in cooking at the age of 15. He has presided over the kitchens of internationally famous hotels and restaurants. Now, after many years with the Line, he is the proud director of this most modern kitchen. His Cabin Class kitchen contains two large electric ranges, each with 8 ovens, and one smaller range with 3 ovens for the vegetable cook. The main service hotpress in the kitchen is 55 feet long.

The Tourist kitchen and Third Class kitchen are equipped like the Cabin kitchen. In addition, the ship has a large bake shop and a Kosher kitchen where food is prepared according to the Jewish ritual.

The "Queen Mary's" vast cooking department has a total electrical load of 1500 kilowatts.

In speed and comfort this superliner sets new standards in transatlantic travel.



WPA LENDS A HAND

Chicago.—The Works Progress administration during March furnished Don C. Rogers, school survey director here, 800 watchmen to show Mr. Rogers what they could do.

They showed him plenty. But his monthly report showed him more. It revealed that in March, 1935, when there were no WPA watchmen to protect the schools, 1,700 window panes were broken. But in March, 1936, under the WPA's eagle eye, 3,000 were broken. "Hoodlums," explained Rogers, referring to the vandals who shattered the windows.

Hams From Poland Ruin Business, Says Packer

Austin, Minn.—How American packers, workers and the farmers from whom the packers buy are suffering from the steady increase in Polish cooked hams imported into the United States since the Roosevelt "scarcity" program began to take its toll, is graphically set forth in "The Squeal," house organ of the Hormel Packing company here.

"The invasion of the American market by packing house operators of Poland with their Polish canned ham has reached such proportions as to disrupt the American production of canned hams. The Hormel company has been stymied in its sale of canned hams and has been unable to employ its normal labor in its canned ham department," says the publication.

"Shortly after the AAA became effective, Polish hams began appearing on the New York market. Little by little the Polish ham sales grew. Despite a processing tax of $7.50 a hundredweight, and despite the tariff, believed to have been eased under a reciprocal trade treaty by the American state department with Poland, the Polish hams undersold the American canned ham, including the Hormel (Minnesota) canned ham. Already by the time of the Supreme court decision on the AAA, the Polish hams were flooding the American market. On the day after the decision, with the $7.50 tax no longer required, Polish canned hams dropped from 34 to 28 cents a pound."

National Debt Grows.

Washington.—The United States national debt, according to the report of the treasury department, was 31 billion 428 million dollars on April 29 as compared with 28 billion 674 million on the same date last year.

THE CRACKER BARREL

Apparently there is no dearth of prosperity in the "canned speech" industry in Washington. Measured by volume, it is probably the leading American industry.

Each one of the alphabetical agencies has its own writers, aided by a corps of statistical experts, busily engaged in preparing "canned" speeches for delivery by New Deal advocates at important meetings, over the radio and on the floor of congress. The White House, of course, can call on any or all of these "ghost" writers for assistance when occasion demands.

One of these statistical fellows could probably figure how many times this "canned" product would circumscribe the universe. Medical science, we understand, is making tests to determine its value as an anesthetic.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1936 NUMBER 23

MEMORIAL DAY OBSERVED SATURDAY

Few now survive from among those for whom Memorial Day was particularly established. The ranks of the Grand Army of the Republic are shattered. Younger men, veterans of later wars, take the place of those who wore the blue or gray from Bull Run to Appomattox, as symbols of the nation's strength in arms, and this is especially true at St. Joe, the American Legion is now responsible for the successful observance and old friends and citizens turn out in vast numbers to do honor to our departed heres.

One likes to believe that these manifestations of Ameican life do not in the least modify the nation's sense of devotion to the memory of those who have borne her arms to victory. One hears much in these days of pacifism, of oaths solemnly taken never to bear arms in war, of the supposed mockery of popular government, the rise of dictatorships and the smashing of treaty pledges. One hears too little of the innumerable thousands of stanch American hearts which still believe in national honor, the Constitution and the causes for which men in the past have been proud to die.

A people ready to observe Memorial Day is not one to give way to despair. Saturday we honored the patriot dead. We honor, no less, the living who are inspired by the example of those whose graves they decorate.

At St. Joe, Memorial Day has become a regular home coming, and this year was no exception, as more came from afar than usual, and in taking note we report the following guests and their families:

John Sechler, Kendallville; Wm. Oberholtzer, Butler; Charles Quance, Ft. Wayne; Stanley Monroe, West Unity, Ohio; Grover Curie, Kendallville; Bessie Tustison, Springfield, O.; Chas. Bishop, Cleveland, O.; H. S Bowman, Chicago; Glen Abel, Montpelier, O.; Clarence Hart, Ossian; Floyd Reasoner, Fort Wayne; Ray Herrick, Fort Wayne; Lee Tustison, Defiance, O.; Mrs. Parlia Hull, South Bend; Henry Hathaway, Corunna; Clayton Hathaway and John Knight, Butler; Russell Hathaway, Cleveland, O.; Ora Baker, Bluffton; Albert Caskie, Fostoria, O.; Art Woodcox, Auburn; Norman Wyatt, Auburn; John G. Benninghoff, Fort Wayne; Joe Koch, Grabill; Stanley Koch, Fort Wayne; Joe Woodcox, Garrett, Mrs. Everett Mavis, Auburn; Arthur Wilmot, Fort Wayne, and possibly many others.

The program as carried out is as follows:

1:15 P. M.—Band concert on public square by local High School Band, under direction of C. A. Woodcox.
1:40 P. M.—March to H. S. Gym.
2:00 P. M.—Program at Gym.

At the soldiers monument a short service was closed by Taps being sounded and with bowed heads, and minds at rest, we paused once more to pay our brief tribute to the soldier dead of this great nation. They were ready and willing when their homes needed protection, when the land that was theirs was in need. They have given their all that we today might be free; to them we owe a gratitude greater than we can show. "Greater love hath no man than this—" Let us accord them due honor.

The cemetery looked its best and friends lingered and talked with old acquaintances and visited for some time.

A fine new Chevrolet truck has come to St. Joe Valley, and it bears the name of "Widney Orchard." The body has been beautifully lettered and will advertise the orchards in fine style as they drive about. Because of their daily trips to Fort Wayne market they needed a truck that would haul a larger load of produce and thus save many miles driving, as they frequently made two trips a day to Fort Wane.

Memorial Day guests in Jos. F. Porter's home were A. L. Strupp, wife and two daughters and Jas. Morris and wife, of Fort Wayne. 'H. L. M.' Says New Deal Is Due for 'Bum's Rush'

New York.—American citizens are fed up with the New Deal and are about to give it "what, on less exalted levels, would be described graphically as the bum's rush," H. L. Mencken has written in the current issue of the American Mercury, magazine of which he was formerly editor.

". . . A large part of the money wasted so far," he wrote, "has gone into helping Wallace prevail against Tugwell, and Hopkins to upset and flabbergast Ickes.

"Whenever one of the brethren gets a new hunch there is a sharpening of activity, and the taxpayer goes on the block for another squeeze. And whenever one of them comes to grief, which is almost every day, the others rush into the gap with something worse. . . ."

Mencken said the New Deal differed from communism, Fascism and Nazi ism only in "its more reckless hospitality to miscellaneous nonsense."

THE CRACKER BARREL

Most unfortunate, the title chosen for New Dealer Robinson's "canned" reply to Al Smith:

"The voice is the voice of Jacob
But the hand is the hand of Esau."

The Robinson speech came fresh from the Michelson cannery.

To Paul Mallon, we are indebted for the enlightening information that Doctor High, founder of the Good Neighbor league, has contributed "editorial" assistance in the preparation of the President's speeches. Is columnist Mallon trying to insinuate in polite language that Mr. Roosevelt's speeches are "canned"?

ENJOYABLE GATHERING OF OLD FRIENDS

A very enjoyable gathering and meeting of old friends was held at the home of Merritt Sechler on Decoration Day.

At the noon hour a bounteous pot luck dinner was served. The time was spent in visiting and talking over old times.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bishop, and daughter, Catherine and Dr. and Mrs. Russell Hathaway, of Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. Bessie Tustison and granddaughter, Nancy and Miss Whittington, of Springfield, Ohio; Mrs. Belle Banrey, of Hicksville; Dr. and Mrs. Clayton Hathaway and son, Bishop, of Butler; Mr. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hathaway of Kendallville; Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Langley, Mrs. Everett Mavis and daughter, Betty, and Miss Mary Ellen Hines, of Auburn, and Mrs. Jennie Sechler, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Curie, daughter, Lucille and son, Frank, of this place.

DeKalb county swine breeders are taking a great interest in the coming fall fair. The Swine Breeders association in order to increase an interest among 4-H club members will give pigs as prizes to all grand champions in all breeds.

Otto Ginther, of Spencer township, will give a Hampshire pig; Roy Provines & Sons, of Jackson township, a Chester White pig; Arthur Emerick, of Jackson township, a big type Poland and Earl Stimman, of Jackson and Frank Schuster, of Fairfield township, a Duroc pig.

These pigs will be personal prizes from the donors and they will be in addition to the cash premiums offered by the fair association.

TAX COLLECTION ON THE INCREASE

Total collections during the spring taxpaying period this year were $365,023, County Treasurer Claude P. Fitch reported Thursday.

This is an increase of $39,194 over a year ago, or 12 per cent. The payments of current tax this spring aggregated $327,415, an increase of $36,000, or about 12½%. Those owing delinquent tax paid $37,608, an increase of $3,760, or 11%.

The total current tax charged for collection this spring was $353,764 and the total delinquent on the books at the beginning of the year was $165,921. Thus $26,000 current and $128,000 delinquent remain unpaid at this time.

HUSBAND CHARGES WIFE NAGGED HIM

Alleging that his wife refused to live with him and abandoned him, Leonard B. Jarrett, of Concord township, Wednesday filed a divorce complaint in the DeKalb circuit court against Edna Jarrett.

The plaintiff says his wife nagged him and criticised him in the presence of other people; that she would not get regular meals for him and neglected her other household duties; would not talk to him and told him she thought nothing of him.

The couple married Nov. 12, 1925, and parted last Nov. 17. The plaintiff is represented by Attorney W. D. Stump.

LARGE CROWDS SEE FREE MOVIES

The Saturday night crowds are increasing in numbers, and nearly everyone is well pleased with the free pictures.

From all reports, the merchants say that last Saturday night beat all records for attendance. Only a small portion of the crowd could be seated and many left before the picture was finished. With the parking being eliminated near the grounds, it makes it impossible for many to stand until the show is completed. We hope this matter will be taken care of before another night.

The pictures for future shows seen to be of an interesting nature as indicated by the titles.

Sumotari, Not Ju-Jitsu, Real Japanese Wrestling

Ju-jitsu is not, as most people imagine, Japanese wrestling. It is merely their art of self-defense. Japanese wrestling is sumotari, a form of athletics in which every ounce of weight counts. It is the national sport, and very popular indeed; Sumo stars receive fees in excess of those commanded by successful baseball players. They are immensely powerful, but also very fat, and look like huge balls of blubber.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married. Tubby and Bryn await Deborah in a hotel in Frisco. Over a period of one year the groom is to prove he is no fortune hunter and can make Deborah happy to the satisfaction of her grandmother. Otherwise the fortune is to go to charity. The will is somewhat ambiguous as to whom Deborah is to marry. The girl arrives with Holworthy. Tubby is surprised to find her charming and sweet. The wedding over, the couple arrives at the home of Deborah's grandmother. The grandmother and Bryn, who she believes to be Stuart, take to one another.

Grandmother was gazing at him again as if she could scarcely take her eyes away. It was unfortunate that he meant so much to her if Grandmother approved of him too highly. It might make it difficult, at the end of the year, to explain why Deborah would be happier without him. And Grandmother in the meantime might think . . . she might expect . . . Deborah moved uneasily.

"My dear boy," Grandmother was saying, "I cannot see that there is the slightest resemblance between you and your father. You are so much taller than he was, so much more . . . perhaps I mean athletic looking. But perhaps I shouldn't have expected you to look like the Grahams. My husband told me years ago, after he had been East to see you, that you looked very much like your mother's people."

"Did he?" the man murmured. "A number of people have mentioned it. I never could see it myself."

"And I cannot see it," Grandmother said decidedly. "Your mother's people were very dark. Why, her two brothers were quite swarthy, and I never thought of her as being in the least fair, or clear-skinned. I never could understand . . ." Grandmother said, and stopped. "But of course," she went on hastily, appalled at what she had almost said, "she was a very fine woman, my dear Stuart."

"I always believed so."

"Of course you did. Although you would scarcely remember her, I think?"

"He doesn't remember her at all," Deborah said quickly. "She died when he was only three, Grandmother. He couldn't possibly remember her."

The man looked across the table. His eyes were twinkling, amused. Deborah looked back at him, coolly.

It wasn't going to be exactly easy to carry off this situation. But no matter how difficult it might be it was better than marrying Stuart Graham. Anything was better than marrying Stuart Graham. Deborah shut her eyes for a moment as she remembered that other face, dark and angry and sneering. There had been very little dissembling on Stuart Graham's part, even in Mr. Holworthy's presence. Apparently it hadn't seemed necessary to him to pretend gentleness and courtesy even for the few necessary hours. It had been perfectly obvious that he hadn't dreamed for a moment that she could or would refuse to marry him, refuse to go through with the horrible bargain. When she did summon up her courage, after two hours of listening to his talk with Mr. Holworthy, when the words sprang to her lips and she heard herself saying in a queer cold little voice that she could never marry him no matter what happened, he had been terrible. He had called her prudish, ignorant, insane.

Grandmother wouldn't have believed it, couldn't have believed it, if she had been told. It would have killed her to bring Stuart Graham here and let her see him as he was. She and Grandfather had told themselves for years that in a miserably unhappy world one star would always shine as bright as the sun; no matter what happened, the Grahams were gentlemen.

Perhaps they were, by birth and tradition, but they didn't always act as gentlemen in books acted. Gary had guessed what might happen. He hadn't been so sure of the Grahams after all. Deborah remembered his words as he had helped her into the rickety wagon down at their neighbor's farm, when he was hurrying her off so that he could go back to Grandmother, alone on the mountain. He had tucked the dust-cover around her and stepped back; and then, suddenly, he had come up close, his old face worn and troubled, and he had said, "If you don't like him, Miss Deborah, don't you have anything to do with him. We'll get along some way. If you don't like his looks, don't you do it. We'll just look around for another way."

This was the other way. The tall young man at the head of the table, willing to sell his gentlemanly appearance, his good manners, his smiles, for a year—for fifty thousand dollars.

Of course, since one must be fair and just, he had not been considering his own opportunities there in Mr. Holworthy's office, not just at first. After Deborah had stood up and told Stuart in that strange voice that she couldn't possibly marry him, after she had repeated it again and again and made him see that she meant it, he had been in a wild rage. It was then that he had said such horrible things to her. His words had come out in such a torrent that Mr. Holworthy couldn't stop them. After a moment Deborah had run away, into an outer office, anywhere to escape from Stuart Graham, of course, so loud-voiced, so thick-lipped and bold. But Stuart had followed her. Stuart was a bully. He was still talking to her, pushing himself directly between her and the door, between her and freedom, when this quiet young man with the steady gray eyes had risen from a chair and faced him. He stopped his loud talking and began to mutter. But Bryn hadn't moved, except that his arm came straight up, and his fist hit Stuart under the chin with a terrific crash, and Stuart had crumpled to the floor.

"Deborah, my darling, what is the matter?" Grandmother said suddenly. "You are quite pale!"

"Nothing, Grandmother," Deborah answered, and managed a smile.

"It's rather a long trip up from San Francisco when you're not accustomed to motoring," the man said. "And it's very hot in the Sacramento valley in June."

"I am sure it must have been trying," Grandmother said, still looking at her tenderly. There was something new and solicitous in her expression. "Now that our greatest problem is solved, surely we can make a real change in our way of living."

"What do you mean?" Deborah asked quickly

"Oh, so many things, dear." Grandmother leaned forward. "We must furbish ourselves up, for one thing. We are becoming quite careless as to our ways of living. I've been feeling guilty about it for a long time, but I've been so worried about Deborah that nothing else seemed of any particular importance. But now I feel," she finished briskly, "that we must have two or three extra servants at once, have the grounds put in order, have the electric plant repaired . . ."

"But—" Deborah said faintly, and stopped.

"But what, my darling? Would you not like to see the house filled with young company, with music, with life? To have a host of pretty new clothes?"

"We don't know anyone to fill the house with," Deborah protested miserably.

"Stuart does," Grandmother said with confidence. "He told me only a few moments ago that he had a great many friends in San Francisco."

"Grandmother . . ."

She smiled. "Now, Deborah, of course we should not ask anyone for some time, my dear. You and Stuart must have a month or two of your own, first. But during that time the house and grounds can be taken care of; they have been neglected so long it will be quite an undertaking. Since your grandfather wished that we should spend a year here after your mariage, I think we must try and make it a happy year, and in it prepare you as best we can to mingle in society when we emerge at last from our retreat."

"I never want to go away from here," Deborah cried, "never, never!"

"Why, Deborah!" Grandmother said in surprise. "Stuart, the dear child is quite overwrought. Of course you will go away from here, my dear, you and Stuart. The whole world is before you. Am I not right, Stuart? You would not be satisfied to spend all your life here?"

He hesitated, but only for a fraction of a second. Then, "I'm not at all sure that I shouldn't be, if Deborah were to be here," he said.

Deborah jumped from her chair. Her eyes flashed. "Was that necessary?" she asked him bitterly.

Grandmother stood up too, a slight small figure in her gray. "What do you mean?" she asked in a still cold voice.

"Oh!" Deborah began, and stopped. "Nothing," she said slowly. "I am . . . overwrought, Grandmother. I think I will go and rest for a little."

"Of course, dear," she answered, relieved. "Of course. I understand. Go along, then . . . and your things are in the silver rooms in the south wing."

"The silver rooms?" Deborah repeated. Involuntarily her startled eyes fell to the man's and gray and violet clung together. Deborah's cheeks began to burn. She looked away.

Discovered Planet Uranus

The planet Uranus was discovered in 1781 by Sir William Herschel.

Cheaper Feed for More Profit

Home-Grown Grains Can Increase Farmer's Margin.

More than one farmer is making the most of the improved prices for dairy products by adopting economical feeding methods. Savings made through more economical feeding are only one of the many ways in which farmers who are members of dairy herd improvement associations are finding that they can increase their returns.

Substitution of home-grown grains for more expensive protein feeds together with replacement of part of the corn by oats are two ways by which dairymen are finding it possible to cut feed costs without lowering their herd production averages. One farmer increased his monthly net income from 17 cows by $10.88 with a less expensive ration. Oats replaced a part of the corn in the ration, thus reducing the cost of feed approximately 24 cents a hundred pounds. His herd also produced 34 more pounds of butterfat a month on the cheaper feed.

Another increased his net income $11.55 a month through the same kind of a ration change.

A third dairyman used a ration composed of corn, oats and distiller's grain instead of corn and a high protein supplement previously used and was able to cut feed costs by nine cents a hundred pounds, although the protein content was the same. The cheaper ration reduced the feed cost of butterfat by five cents a pound and the feed cost of milk by 14 cents a hundred pounds.

Control of Erosion Important to Farmer

Controlling erosion, the thief of fertile topsoil, is a prominent feature of the new soil-improvement program. The soil-building and conserving crops advocated under the new program serve to check erosion in several ways.

While these crops are growing, their roots form a thick mat which holds the soil particles in place. They also check the run-off of rain water by impeding its flow down hill and by increasing the capacity of the land to absorb water in large quantities.

Then after they have been plowed under, the building and conserving crops add organic matter to the soil that makes it soft and spongy. Rain soaks into such soil and is held for long periods.

Soil well filled with organic matter also has a greater tendency to remain in place than gritty sand or clay soils. When the soil absorbs large quantities of water it prevents floods during heavy rains and keeps the land from drying out so completely when rainfall is scarce.

On an 8 per cent slope a field on which nothing but corn is grown will lose 25 per cent of its rainfall by immediate run-off and an average of 67 tons of soil per acre through erosion each year.

But if the field is in a good soil-building crop, it will lose less than 5 per cent of its rainfall and only a few hundred pounds of soil per acre.

When corn, wheat, and clover are grown in rotation, the average run-off of rain water is less than half the amount from a field kept continually in corn, and the soil losses are only one-seventh as much.

Use for Durum Wheat

While durum wheat is unsatisfactory for the manufacture of bread, it is particularly suitable for the production of macaroni, spaghetti and other similar food products which are collectively known as alimentary pastes. The best quality pastes are made from semolina a coarse granular product obtained from durum wheat by a special milling process which differs from that employed in the production of flour from bread wheat. Macaroni and similar products, says the Montreal Herald, are prepared from semolina by mixing and kneading it with water and salt to produce a stiff unleavened dough which is forced through suitable dies to produce the shapes desired, the surplus water added being removed by a drying or curing treatment.

POULTRY FACTS

TELLS WHY CHICKS DIE WHEN BROODED

Coccidiosis, Pullorum, Cause Poultryman Says.

By C. M. Ferguson, Extension Poultryman, for the Ohio State University.
WNU Service.

When chicks die during the brooding season, the cause is usually coccidiosis or pullorum disease. For pullorum disease there is no cure. The disease is transmitted from the parent through the egg. It is caused by a specific bacteria, and may be controlled only through a sound program of blood testing of breeding flocks.

Coccidiosis, on the other hand, is caused by a microscopic organism that enters the chick's body through the alimentary tract. It may be picked up from contaminated soil, contaminated feed, or contaminated litter, and the most likely source of the infection is from adult chickens on the farm. It is very unlikely that this disease is often purchased with the chicks.

The surest means of preventing an infection is to isolate the young chicks from the old chickens. Hens should not be allowed to associate with chicks, nor be permitted to run over the ground on which the chicks are being ranged.

Use of cinder yards, wire porches and clean range all have their place in fighting this disease, but in addition, it is important to take precaution against carrying the disease organism from the adult flock to the chicks on the poultryman's feet. For this purpose, wear rubbers when caring for the chicks.

Since coccidiosis organism requires warmth and moisture during the part of its life cycle spent outside the body of the fowl, it is good practice to keep the brooder house as dry as possible by placing water fountains on screened platforms.

Finds Oil Dipped Eggs Will Hold Fresh Quality

Many poultrymen beat the heat in summer by dipping eggs in a thin, white mineral oil. This seals the pores of the shells and helps the eggs retain their fresh quality.

Recent tests by the United States Department of Agriculture show that oiled eggs also stay fresh much better in cold storage than unoiled eggs. In an eight-month storage test, the original grade was retained by 65.8 per cent of the eggs oiled at a temperature of 60 degrees F.; by 55 per cent oiled at 80 degrees, but by only 32.5 per cent of those which were unoiled.

Eggs given the oil and vacuum carbon dioxide treatment retained 88 per cent of their original grade at the end of the storage test. This method, developed by T. L. Swenson, of the bureau of chemistry and soils, was 35 per cent more efficient than plain oiling and 173 per cent more efficient than storage with no oil treatment.

In the vacuum process eggs are dipped in oil in an air-tight chamber. Enough air is pumped out to create a partial vacuum. Some air also escapes from the eggs. When carbon dioxide is turned into the chamber, the eggs draw enough oil into the pores of the shell to form a complete seal. Carbon dioxide has a stabilizing effect on the egg white. If air is used, eggs do not retain their freshness.

The "Silkie" Bantam

The "silkie" bantam is the most unique specimen of all poultrydom, and is one of the oldest of the over 100 varieties of bantams. The silkie does not have feathers like other fowls, but is covered with a silky down, from whence it derives its name. Silkie bantams are bred in white, black, golden and partridge, but the most perfect are the white, as they are the original, and the variations of color are yet in the making. Aside from their plumage they are unique in that their skin, flesh, and bones are a dark mulberry color. They are good layers of medium-sized eggs. Their most valuable characteristic is their propensity to be broody, and they are prized by game and rare bird breeders for hatching and rearing valuable and tender birds. Silkie bantams cannot fly.

Original Bantam Breeds

The original bantam breeds, imported and otherwise, are: Cuckoo Cochin, Bearded and Non-bearded Mille Fleur, Blue de Anvers, Black de Grubbe, Blue de Grubbe, Black Belgian, Blue Belgian, Quail Belgian, Black Belgian Barbus de Anvers, Mottled de Anvers, Blue Belgian Barbus de Anvers, Belgian de Uccle, Golden Sebright, Silver Sebright, Black Sumatra, White Silkie, Black Silkie, White Japanese, Gray Japanese, Black Tailed Japanese, Creve Coeur, Black Rose Comb.

Ducks for Meat, Eggs

Disregarding any difference in size or color of eggs, it may be said that the Pekin duck is to be preferred where meat production is the object, as it is on practically all duck farms. The Pekin has to give place to the Indian Runner if egg production alone is had in mind and these two breeds may be said to summarize in themselves the most desirable market qualities, with other breeds having each its own distinctive merits. The Indian Runner lays a white egg.

Outward-Spinning Whirlpool Puzzling Marine Phenomenon

A puzzling marine phenomenon, recently discovered in the Atlantic ocean about 150 miles off the coast of Massachusetts, is an outward—instead of an inward—spinning whirlpool.

This reversed eddy, which is strong enough to throw a ship off its course, is believed to be the only one of its kind in the world.—Collier's Weekly.

PHOSPHORUS AND CALCIUM NEEDED

Both Elements Frequently Found in Same Foods.

By EDITH M. BARBER

TODAY the question of phosphorus is before us. Fortunately calcium and phosphorus are often found in the same foods. For the formation of bone and teeth one is as necessary as the other. Every cell in the body contains phosphorus, and even after growth is completed we must keep on supplying enough to replace what is used daily. Nerve tissue also demands phosphorus, and, with calcium, it has an important role to play in regulating the acid-alkaline content of the blood. Milk and milk products, eggs, whole cereals, such vegetables as lentils and dried beans, are the most important sources of this mineral, which is so necessary to the maintenance of life. A number of other vegetables and fruits, however, supply us with worthwhile amounts, but should not be depended upon entirely for this supply.

It has been found that many American families in which milk is not used liberally are not getting an adequate amount of this mineral, which is needed in an infinitesimal amount by weight. In order, however, to get an adequate supply, milk and eggs, whole cereals, vegetables and fruits are necessary.

You see that it is practically possible to check your diet for calcium and phosphorus at the same time.

Unusual Colors

A new color scheme for a bedroom is pictured in a recent issue of "House and Garden." Walls are a cool tone of silvery gray. Furniture is white lacquer. The floor is covered with a cerise carpet and the doors, woodwork and molding are painted in a blue-violet tone that has an atmospheric quality and is reminiscent of the color of the Texas "Bluebonnet."

Measuring Tip

A half tablespoonful or half teaspoonful of any dry ingredient or solid fat is always measured as follows: Fill the spoon full. If it is a dry ingredient, level it off, then measure it lengthwise of the spoon into halves, scraping off the unused half. If a solid fat is being measured, first pack it down into the spoon, then level it off and proceed as directed.

Making Wall Attractive

An attractive stone wall seen recently was painted white two-thirds of the way up. The upper third was left in its natural brick color and ivy, growing over the wall, introduced a third pleasing color.

When Painting Chimney

When painting a brick chimney to improve its appearance, an interesting effect can sometimes be obtained by painting occasional bricks in different colors.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THE words footstool and foot rest, are comprehensive, and now when these articles are being featured in comfortable furnishings, it is interesting to note some of the various types. They range from the smallest sizes, which may be merely floor cushions to those so large and high that they can serve as low seats without backs, as instanced in ottomans.

Ottomans assume pompous proportions when they have a center circular post, upholstered, around which a circular seat extends which is also upholstered. Such ottomans are chiefly found in hotels and such public places as they afford the maximum seating capacity for the minimum space. It is adaptable for foot rest or seat, and deserves to be popular, as it does double duty and is an aristocrat in furnishings.

Crickets

There is a wide difference between the choice styles of ottomans to the humble cricket, which is the most insignificant of footstools. But this does not interfere with its comfort-giving quality. By the way this word cricket is not affiliated in its derivation with the cricket which sings on the hearth or adds its melodious chirping to autumn evenings. The cricket which is a home furnishing may be a low four-legged footstool, or it may be shaped like a miniature bench. The two names cricket and footstool would seem to be synonymous but the footstool is more comprehensive than the cricket.

A hassock is another sort of footstool deriving its name from a grass which grows in large tufts. Its original footstool form was as a grass mat or kneeling cushion, and the name hassock still remains as the right one for kneeling-benches or cushions, furnishing pews. In homes the hassock is a carpet or textile covered cushion filled with hair, excelsior, or other soft materials so closely packed that the shape of the hassock remains unimpaired by use.

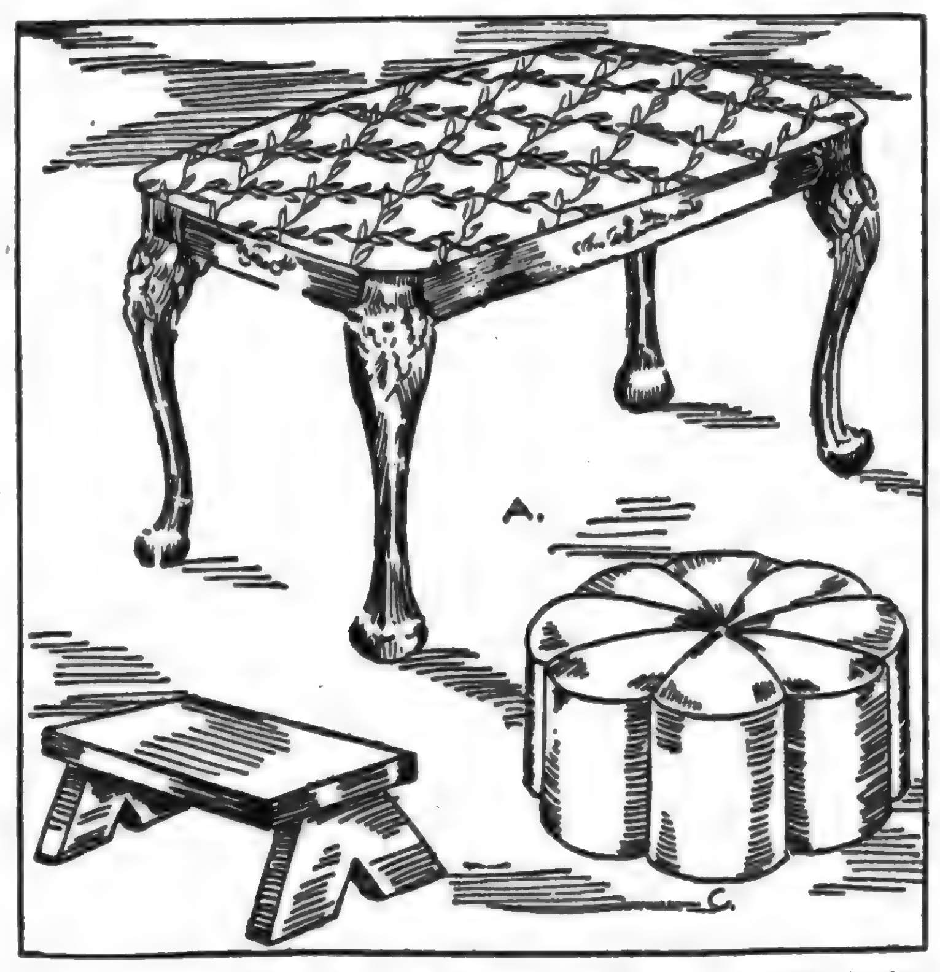
New Notion

Recently a varnish product has been placed on the market which is applied to furniture by the simple expedient of wiping it on with a cloth. It dries rapidly with a very high gloss and is much more durable and permanent than any type of furniture polish. It can be used over any finish where varnish proves satisfactory.



Three Examples of Footstools; the Ottoman, the Hassock, and the Cricket.

ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Pat Scanlan's Triple Play

THE grandfather of James E. McGrath of Evanston, Ill., was T. D Scanlan, one of the pioneers who laid the first transatlantic cable out of Hearts Content, Newfoundland. He was also the father of Jim's uncle Patrick Scanlan.

Pat Scanlan, and now we're getting down to cases, was one of the most powerful swimmers and fishermen Canada or New England has seen. Often he plunged into lakes and swam them with a surveyor's chain in his mouth. And while doing this, Pat always had time to select the likeliest fishing pools.

His finest fishing is family history, handed down to Jim McGrath. It happened in upper New York state and Jim is positive it's true because Pat yelled so loudly it shook the McGrath house, down in Brooklyn.

You see, Pat was fishing in this lake he had seen while nibbling a surveying chain. It was near dusk and he was casting three hooks near the shore for fish lie sometimes in shallow water when it's getting dark.

Pat cast and hooked a trout, He played the fish a short time, then gave a determined jerk to establish who was boss. As Pat jerked he snared a muskrat on the second hook. That was too much so he whooped and threw the double catch high in air casting trout, muskrat and line back toward the water with a mighty "swoosh."

And when Pat heaved the line toward the water he caught a humming bird on the third hook. He always claimed it was the only unassisted triple play of that particular season.

The End of the Philly-Loo

IT IS a well-known fact that the philly-loo bird is extinct but accounts of the death of the last survivor vary. Larry Flint, a Pennsylvania newspaper man says he saw the tragedy while visiting in Wyoming.

"The philly-loo was ferociously fond of the holes in doughnuts. His method of eating them was unique; he backed up to them, slipped his tail through them, then flicked the appendage around in front and fed himself.

"An old-timer out there, knowing of this peculiarity, sought out the last surviving philly-loo and laid several doughnut holes down in front of the bird. In order to eat the hole, the philly-loo had to move his tail around into the proper juxtaposition. This brought about his end."

But F. F. Fuller of the Rhame (N. D.) Review has another version of the story. He says that he and another editor had the job of hunting down the last survivors of the race to serve at a banquet for some visiting newspaper men. Near a mountain in the Bad Lands they flushed a covey of the birds and started chasing them.

"The philly-loos began circling the mountains," relates Mr. Fuller. "As they did so each bird grabbed the tail of the bird ahead and as they mounted upward and the circle narrowed, they swallowed to take up the slack. They kept circling and swallowing until each bird had completely swallowed the bird ahead, and they entirely disappeared from before our eyes. All that is left are a few tracks circling the mountain that look just like those made by an automobile driven by a one-armed driver. I've never seen a philly-loo bird since that time."

Winner by a Nose

LOTS of fellows who work in a metropolis were born in the great open spaces, and invariably they retain their hankering for the hinterlands.

Lewis W. Hunt, city editor of the Chicago Daily News, is no exception. And sometimes when the boys are having a chinning match he is unable to conceal his liking for the bad lands of Montana from whence he came.

So when a party from Kansas asserted that in his country it became so dry it was necessary to run water from the well through a wringer, and to throw gravel on the barn to delude the cows into thinking rain was falling, so they'd come ont, Luke asserted himself.

"It's cold we relish in Montana," declaimed Hunt. "One winter in my home town the mercury sank so low that boiling hot coffee froze in a solid stream en route from pot to cup.

"And that was the year," he concluded, "that the man in our town with the longest nose froze his proboscis. A friend recommended the only possible relief would be to rub snow on it. The long-nosed man rubbed snow on the part of his nose he could reach and threw snowballs at the rest. In nine days he was entirely recovered."

Insane Monarchs

Europe had more insane monarchs in power during the last half of the Eighteenth century than in any other similar period in its history. During this time nine of them mounted the thrones of seven countries. An interesting one was Abdul Hamid I, who reigned over Turkey from 1773 to 1789 writes Alan B. Cox, New York city, in Collier's Weekly. Before he was made sultan, Abdul had been locked in a cage for 43 years.

ALL PERSONS EIGHTEEN YEARS OF AGE OR OVER MUST HAVE A LICENSE TO FISH IN THE STATE OF INDIANA EXCEPT ON THEIR OWN PREMISES.

Indiana's open season on the taking of black bass and other game fish will be welcomed by thousands of fishermen early Tuesday morning (June 16th) with every prospect of some record of first-day catches, Virgil M. Simmons, commissioner of the Department of Conservation, announced.

Advance reports from game wardens and fishing enthusiasts in all parts of the state indicate a record hatch of game fish during the past few weeks of the spawning season when the taking of game fish was prohibited. Weather conditions generally have been favorable and a majority of the streams are in good shape with fewer violations of the closed season regulations this year.

The open season on bass and other game fish begins at one minute after midnight, Central Standard Time, Tuesday morning, June 16 and fishermen possessing game fish before that time will be subject to arrest. All streams and lakes will be patrolled by game wardens Monday night and Tuesday morning to see that the fishermen have their licenses with them and that the regulations on the minimum size and the number of each species taken, are observed.

USE OF FLUSHING BAR SAVES BIRDS

Use of a flushing bar on mowing machines will save thousands of quail and other ground-nesting birds in Indiana this spring, Virgil M. Simmons asserted in an appeal to farmers and operators of mowing machines cutting grass and weeds along roads.

Seeking to protect their nests, quail and other ground-nesting birds will stay on the eggs until the last possible minute before flying or being caught in the sickle. Even when the birds escape the nest is destroyed and the eggs left to spoil. A flushing bar—a piece of burlap or other cloth which brushes the grass or hay ahead of the mowing blade will cause the birds to fly and give the operator an opportunity to lift the blade before the nest is harmed.

MORTUARY

SHEFFER

Craig Sheffer was born in St. Joe, January 14, 1885, and passed away June 3, 1936, having attained the age of 51 years, 4 months and 21 days.

Craig was the youngest of three children of Dr. B. S. and Mrs. Eva Sheffer, honored citizens of St. Joe from shortly after its founding. The Sheffer family are now all dead, save the aged widow.

The deceased united with the Church of Christ when he was quite young. He was also a graduate of the St. Joe High School class of 1903.

On November 6, 1909, he was united in marriage with Miss Grace George, and to this union was born one son, Basil Everett.

Craig was a hard worker, having chosen to be a blacksmith. He worked at his trade in several different places in Indiana and Ohio. He became physically unable to continue at that trade.

His honor and integrity were never questioned, and he was known as a good citizen in the matters essential to our daily lives.

At the time of his death, he with his family were operating the Betz restaurant.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the home conducted by J. N. Scholes, with burial in Riverside cemetery by Mayola Kinsey & Son.

BAILEY

Mary Elizabeth McNabb born in Jackson Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, October 4, 1858, departed this life June 6, 1936, at the age of 77 years, 8 months and 2 days. She was married to John C. Bailey April 6, 1876. To this union were born five children, B. L. Bailey, of Auburn, Mrs. Alice Watson, of Jackson Township, Mrs. Ida Pugsley, deceased, Mrs. Winnie Poper and Robert S. Bailey, of near St. Joe.

There are six grandchildren and five great grandchildren, all living. Early in life Mrs. Bailey became a member of the United Brethren Church. For many years she resided on the County Line road and then moved to St. Joe, where her husband engaged in the meat business. At the death of her husband, she made her home with her children, passing away at the home of her daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Poper.

The funeral was held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Poper, east of St. Joe, Tuesday afternoon, J. N. Scholes, officiating. Burial was made in Riverside cemetery, St. Joe.

VOTERS PRAISE 1936 PLATFORM OF STATE G. O. P.

Republican Nominees Enthusiastic; National Convention This Week Holds Center of Stage

Indianapolis, June 8.—While developments in the national Republican convention in Cleveland are being watched eagerly by millions of tax-oppressed and brain-trust-weary voters throughout the nation, the Republican party of Indiana today stands on the threshold of a campaign in which G. O. P. nominees will be impelled toward victory by their almost unprecedented vigor and enthusiasm.

The platform adopted in the state Republican convention last week reveals that the party's candidates for state offices stand committed, first of all, to restoration of people's faith in their elected officials and to establishment of honest common-sense methods in the state's government and in its tax structure.

Heading the Indiana Republican ticket is Raymond S. Springer, former judge of the Fayette county circuit court and first commander of the Indiana Department of the American Legion—a man whose honesty and sincerity have never been beclouded, whose inspiring leadership was evidenced in army service during the World Wa and in the American Legion after the war, and whose reputation as a loyal friend to people in every walk of life is established nowhere more firmly than among his neighbors and associates in the city of Connersville.

Equally well qualified, in the opinion of their numerous friends and acquaintances throughout the state, are the other Republican nominees for state offices. They are:

Joe Kyle, of Gary, for lieutenant-governor; James A. Slane, of Lafayette, for secretary of state; War and in the American Legion ditor of state; David R. Scott, of E. E. Neal, of Noblesville, for auman J. Lasher, of Seymour, for Linton, treasurer of state; Norton; John A. Sabo, of Gary, for reporter of the Supreme and Apsuperintendent of public instrucpellate Courts; Travis B. Williams, of Evansville, and Oren W. Dickey, of Marion, for judges of the Supreme Court; and Alfred Evens, of Bloomington, and Clifford V. DuComb, of South Bend, for judge of the Appellate Court.

Distressed by the ever-growing rebellion of conservative Democrats against waste, experimentation, regimentation, interference with private business, and violation of sound platform pledges, Postmaster-General Farley and his "Reorganize-America" forces are preparing to disseminate many volumes of New Deal propaganda in connection with the renomination of President Roosevelt at the national Democratic contion to be held in Philadelphia.

Meanwhile, Governor McNutt and the men behind his "throne" —Frank McHale and Bowman Elder—are anticipating joyously the nomination of their chief "ordertaker," Lieutenant-Governor M. Clifford Townsend, as gubernatorial candidate in the state conclave of Democrats scheduled for June 16.

With the resources of the McNutt administration's "Two Per Cent Club" at his command, Lieut. Gov. Townsend is regarded by all but a few State House payrollers as a practically invincible aspirant for the nomination. Elder is treasurer of the Two Per Cent club, the funds of which represent a part of the money contribtued by taxpayers generally for the maintenance of government functions.

Their faith in both state and national Democratic platform pledges of economy having been broken, Indiana voters are accepting the state Republican platform for the 1936 campaign as the key to relief from excessive taxes and from maladministration of government. From all parts of the state, Republican leaders are hearing expressions of praise and gratefulness by voters who have studied the platform.

This platform commits the Republican party of Indiana to the following program:

Repeal of the gross income tax, elimination of the emergency clause of the $1.50 tax law and a study of its applicability to incorporated cities and towns, reduction of the state gasoline tax and auto license fees, and enactment of a net income tax to be supplemented with such other taxes as will not burden real estate.

Repeal of the Reorganization Act with the attendant centralization of dictorial powers in the office of Governor.

Repeal of the Alcoholic Beverages Control Act and establishment of "home rule" in regulation of liquor sales and licenses.

Payment of a minimum of $600 per year to local governent units for teachers' salaries, out of state funds, instead of the $400 now paid by the state for that purpose.

Installation of a merit system of personnel management to insure employment of qualified persons in state departments.

Outlawing of the existence of such organizations as the Two Per Cent Club in the state government.

Support of the collective bargaining principle in industrial disputes and protection of the right of labor to organize without interference from government or any other source.

Administration of social security and relief by elected local officials on the basis of community needs and the ability of taxpayers to pay.

Authority for farmers themselves in planning and administering their soil conservation and credit programs.

Flag Day, 1936

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman

Sentinels of the Republic

"The work that we do is the making of the Flag."

America, as this is written, is preparing for its annual and reverent celebration of Flag Day.

From every public building, from millions of private homes, will fly the standard which has been the symbol of American valor and of American love of freedom through a century and a half of glorious history.

What is America doing today to perpetuate those qualities — woven into the flag by the strength and the courage of our fathers?

Are our politicians preaching valor when they urge the sons of pioneers to deny their own initiative, their own self-reliance, and to turn instead to a centralized government for direction, for ideas and for support?

Are the new economic prophets preaching love of freedom when they ask our people to relinquish their constitutional right to govern themselves, so it may be delivered into the hands of temporary officeholders and bureaucrats?

The men and women who braved both danger and hardship to carry the flag across a continent wouldn't have thought so. Few Americans who love personal liberty and independence would think so today. If they did, our flag would lose its meaning.

• • •

Franklin K. Lane once personified the American flag as speaking thus to an humble worker:

"I am your belief in yourself, your dream of what a people may become . . .

"I am all that you hope to be, and have the courage to try for . . .

"I am the Constitution and the Courts, statutes and the statute-makers, soldier and dreadnaught, counsellor and clerk . . .

"I am the clutch of an idea, and the reasoned purpose of resolution . . .

"I am what you make me, nothing more."

We know what our fathers made the flag. Can we afford to nullify their labors?

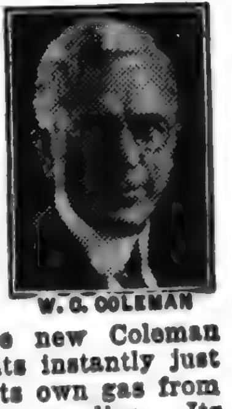
Amazing New Invention of W. C. Coleman Brings All the Modern Conveniences of City Gas to Homes Beyond the Gas Mains

Economically-minded housewives will share the enthusiasm of W. C. Coleman, inventive genius, for his new gas-making stove which cooks a meal for 2c or less.



W. C. COLEMAN

The new Coleman Range will do the family cooking at a cost below that of coal, wood or kerosene stoves, and do it quicker and better.

This remarkable new Coleman Safety Range lights instantly just like gas. Makes its own gas from ordinary lead-free gasoline. Its patented, fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners are easily regulated to exactly the heat desired for frying, boiling, baking or broiling.

Mr. Coleman uses Everdur Metal for the fuel tank, a big safety feature. Everdur metal will not rust or corrode.

In addition to providing every cooking advantage of the finest city gas range, Mr. Coleman's new Range adds beauty in the kitchen by distinctive styling and pleasing color effects in gleaming porcelain enamel finish.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful Coleman Ranges will receive illustrated literature and a valuable Stove Check Chart by addressing a postcard to W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-235, Wichita, Kansas—Adv.

WAYS OF USING LEFTOVER MEAT

Some Suggestions Regarding Questions Often Asked.

By EDITH M. BARBER

"DEAR Miss Barber: Will you make a suggestion for new ways to use leftover meat? There are only two of us and if I have a roast on Sunday, I always have to use it up for dinner during the week. My husband and I both work and are not home for lunch."

This question came to the editor of this column from a business woman housekeeper. Here are a few suggestions in answer to it. For slices of roast lamb, try cooking them lightly in butter or bacon fat for a minute or two on each side. Then add grape juice, cover and let simmer ten or fifteen minutes. This is also very good when grape jelly is used instead of grape juice. Perhaps you would like a recipe for a quickly made grape jelly.

Leftover ham may be treated in the same way, using pineapple, apricot or grape juice. Any one of them is delicious with a wine sauce. Roast beef needs a careful treatment if it is to be warmed over as a second cooking unless properly done will make it tough and stringy. For this meat I usually make my sauce first and then reheat the beef in it. A brown sauce for which wine is used as part of the liquid is good with beef and so is a tomato sauce of the Spanish type.

Quick Meal.

Tomato juice cocktail
Toasted crackers
Sliced lamb with grape juice sauce
Baked potatoes Buttered peas
Raw carrot and celery salad
Cream puffs
Coffee

Method of preparation: Light oven. Scrub potatoes and bake. Prepare salad and chill. Prepare peas and cool. Cook lamb. Open can of chilled tomato juice. Toast crackers. Make coffee.

Grape Juice Jelly.

2 cups sugar.
1 pint bottle grape juice
½ cup bottled pectin

Add the sugar and grape juice into saucepan, stir and bring to boiling point. Add pectin, bring to rolling boil and boil hard half a minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly into clean hot glasses. Pour a thin layer of paraffin on hot jelly. Add a second layer of paraffin the following day and store in a cool, dark place.

Grape Juice Sauce.

2 tablespoons flour
2 tablespoons butter
¾ cup hot water
1 cup grape juice
Juice of one lemon
Salt

Melt butter, add flour, and when well blended add the hot water and grape juice gradually, stirring constantly. Let boil one minute. Add lemon juice and salt to taste and serve with sliced ham.

Spanish Sauce.

2 tablespoons chopped bacon
2 tablespoons chopped celery
2 tablespoons chopped carrots
1 tablespoon chopped onion
2 tablespoons butter
4 tablespoons flour
1½ cups stock
2-3 cup stewed tomatoes

Cook bacon and vegetables until well browned. Add butter, and when melted sprinkle in the flour. When well blended add the stock and tomatoes. Cook five minutes. Strain or not, as desired.

Creamed Fried Onions.

1 dozen medium-sized onions
3 tablespoons fat
3 tablespoons flour
1 teaspoon salt
Pepper
2 cups milk
French toast

Slice and fry the onions in the fat. When light brown, dredge with the flour, stir well, and season and add milk slowly, stirring constantly. Let boil one minute and serve on French toast.

Coffee Jelly.

2 tablespoons granulated gelatin
½ cup cold water
1 cup boiling water
½ cup sugar
3 cups boiled coffee

Soak gelatin 20 minutes in cold water, dissolve in boiling water, strain, add sugar and hot coffee. Turn into mold and chill until set. Serve with whipped cream.

Paint Increases Value

The actual resale or mortgage value of a well-painted home far exceeds that of one which looks run-down-at-the-heels. There is no better proof of this than the fact that today, when many families are refinancing their homes through HOLC, the government insists that the property be repainted if paint is needed.

Setting for a Collection

In a cleverly conceived penthouse high above New York, an effective setting has been contrived for a rare collection of T'ang and Ming ceramics. The living-room walls are painted to simulate light waxed pine. The niches on each side of the fireplace, containing decorative Chinese figurines, are marbleized a pinkish brown and gold.

Rust Marks

If the porcelain sink or bath tub gets a yellow mark from constant dripping of water, the spot will disappear immediately if rubbed with pumice stone. It is just the iron from the water that causes these rusty marks.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Sagacious Serpent

"YES," said Madame Zulawa, the snake-charmer with the old Robinson circus, "Elmer was by far the most intelligent and most versatile serpent I ever had. He was a blacksnake —six feet of patience, pliability and perspicacity. I could call out any number and instantly he'd arrange himself in the form of that figure. His figure eights were a model of rounded symmetry. But all of this was before one horrible night . . ."

Madame Zulawa covered her eyes as though to shut out some terrible sight. There was a tremor in her voice . . . then she went bravely on.

"Our circus train was crossing the high Sierras. Just as it was approaching the summit, Elmer slid out of his cage and started back over the tops of the cars. He was coming back to my car for his cup of warm coconut milk to help him get to sleep.

"Just as he stretched over the gap between two cars, there was the sound of iron snapping. The coupling between the two cars had broken under the strain of pulling the heavy cars up that steep grade. In another moment the rear half of the train would be speeding down the incline, gathering momentum until it jumped the rails at the first curve.

"Elmer knew that everything depended upon him. Quick as a flash he sank his teeth in the wooden top of the car ahead. At the same moment he wrapped his tail around an iron rod on the car behind. The strain on him was fearful, but he hung on grimly . . .

"Well . . . there isn't much more to tell. The whole train passed safely over the summit. But Elmer's days as a performing blacksnake were over. Go to the Cincinnati zoo today and you'll find him there in a cage labeled 'The Only Black Python in Captivity . . . 42 feet, 6¾ inches long.'"

Tenderfoot, Beware!

WHEN a tenderfoot disappears out West some old-timer is certain to shake his head sadly and say: "I reckon a roperite or a tripodero must of got him." Chances are, he's right.

The tripodero has only two legs, arranged like a telescope, so that it can raise or lower itself at will. Its head has a long muzzle with a mouth like a gun barrel. As it lurks among the brush, it raises and lowers itself on its telescopic legs to watch for approaching game.

When the tripodero sees a tenderfoot come jouncing along the trail on horseback, it gets behind a boulder, tilts itself at just the right angle and points its muzzle at the unsuspecting tenderfoot. At the right moment it blows from its mouth a pellet of clay (it always keeps a supply of these quids in its left cheek) which shoots the taste right out of the tenderfoot's mouth. One week and three hours later he dies of starvation because he can't taste anything after he has been shot by the tripodero.

If the tenderfoot is lucky enough to get past the tripodero, the roperite may get him. It is a curious animal with a long rope-like beak which ends in a slip-noose. As the tenderfoot rides singing along the trail past the place where the roperite is lurking, it shoots out this natural lariat, the noose tightens around the luckless Easterner's throat and he chokes to death on the bars of music that stick crosswise in it.

It is estimated that a total of 4,163 tenderfeet have fallen victims to either the tripodero or the roperite in the West since the spring of 1887.

Land of the Sky Blue Water

BABE was Paul Bunyan's big blue ox. He was quite a sizable animal although not all lumberjacks agree as to just how big he was. Some say he was seven axe-handles between the eyes but others declare the figures should be 42 axe-handles and a plug of tobacco. However, all agree that Babe could pull anything that had two ends to it. Paul often used him to pull the kinks out of crooked logging roads.

Occasionally Babe would run away and be gone all day. Paul was the only one who could track him because his footprints were so far apart that an ordinary man couldn't see from one of them to the next one. They were pretty deep, too. Once a settler and his wife and baby fell into one of these footprints and the baby was fifty-seven years old before he finally climbed out and reported the accident.

The winter of the blue snow Babe went on one of these rambles and wandered all over the present state of Minnesota. When the snow melted the next spring the water filled his footprints and that's why Minnesota is now known as the Land of Ten Thousand Lakes—the "Land of the Sky Blue Water."

Truth is beautiful to contemplate, but it is sometimes inconvenient.

JUNGLE HUNTING EASY, BUT ZOO GETS HIM DOWN

Hans Nagel, curator of the Houston (Texas) zoo, says stalking wild animals in jungles is a tame job compared with that of keeping them in captivity.

From 1904 to 1912 Nagel roamed Africa in search of reptiles, beasts and rare fowls for zoos. And in those eight years he met with an accident only once—a lioness lacerated his leg.

But in wild life in cages—that's a different story, one that has meant hospitals and suffering to Nagel. He bears scars from head to foot. A boa constrictor once almost squeezed his life out. Caesar, the zoo lion, bit him through the shoulder. A stork dived from the top of the bird cage and knocked him unconscious. A kangaroo has kicked him to the ground and bitten his arm. Civet cats, lobo wolves, kinkajous and monkeys have gashed his hands and arms. Bobcats and hyenas have attacked him. Elephants have trod on his feet. "Big Jim," largest of the zoo's alligators, sent Nagel to the hospital for 105 days when he sought to halt its escape.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married. Tubby and Bryn await Deborah in a hotel in Frisco. Over a period of one year the groom is to prove he is no fortune hunter and can make Deborah happy to the satisfaction of her grandmother. Otherwise the fortune is to go to charity. The will is somewhat ambiguous as to whom Deborah is to marry. The girl arrives with Holworthy. Tubby is surprised to find her charming and sweet. The wedding over, the couple arrives at the home of Deborah's grandmother. The grandmother and Bryn, who she believes to be Stuart, take to one another, which somewhat displeases Deborah, who foresees difficulty when they are to separate after a year.

"No objections, my dear. The silver rooms were always intended for you, but you preferred to be near me rather than in the south wing alone. Go along, my darling, and perhaps after a little I will follow your example. The excitement and the happiness have quite tired me out."

Deborah went across the room and through the door. She wanted to stamp and kick and scream. This must be how a rabbit felt when it was caught in a snare. She went on, up the long curving staircase, down the corridor into the south wing, through the second door on the right. Inside was a sitting room, with walls panelled in silver, with rugs and chairs and curtains done in deep violet. There was a huge four-poster bed against the inner wall, with a beautiful violet- and tarnished-silver spread upon it, and a low silver bowl of violets on a little table at one side. And, at the foot of the bed, was a man's heavy pigskin bag, as yet unopened.

She went across to it and lifted it with a vicious jerk. It was heavy. She went through the bedroom and the sitting room to the corridor. She put the bag down with a thump on the floor outside the door, pulled the sitting room door shut with a bang and shot the bolt.

CHAPTER III

There were high spiked iron gates at the end of the weed-grown drive. Bryn leaned his shoulders against them, took his silver case out thoughtfully and lit a cigarette.

There is a moment in every day among the mountains when afternoon is definitely over and evening has come. Her dusky silent presence is as real as the moon and stars will be when night falls later on. It is made known to the watcher by a change in the quality of the sunlight, as if a silvery veil had fallen suddenly across the sky.

Bryn recalled that in the last ten miles of narrow, almost impassable road, they had passed but one other dwelling, a small tumble-down shack on a patch of rocky, unkempt mountainside; there, presumably, belonged the boy and the dog he could hear in the distance; the only neighbors.

He turned and walked slowly up the dark path toward the house.

The birds outside Bryn's window wakened him very early; the morning air was still night-cold and fresh when he yawned, stretched, put his hands behind his head and listened for a moment or two to the long involved scoldings and chatterings of a bird family. Bryn threw back his quilts and sprang out of bed.

A few minutes later, in his white shirt and gray knickerbockers he closed his door noiselessly and tiptoed down the hall past the door which must be Deborah's, since it was the only closed one along the corridor. Gary, who was obviously in Deborah's confidence, had been most reluctant even to give Bryn a room in this wing, but it couldn't be helped, since Mrs. Larned herself was in the north wing.

Bryn stepped out over the puff of dew-laden grass at the foot of the steps, to the wide red uneven stones of the path. He thrust his hands in his pockets and sauntered along the side of the south wing and around the end. He was facing the mountain now; there was still a little broken wreath of mist around the top. Between him and the forest, at the back of the stretch of park land, he could see the serrated rows of the orchard trees, and a clear flat space beside it which appeared to be a garden. He followed the narrow beaten path, hedged with drooping wet grass, across to the corner of the orchard. He came to a stop beneath a cherry tree whose topmost boughs were still laden down with heavy fruit. Bryn regarded it. He put a foot on a low branch and swung himself up into the tree as far as the heavier branches would take him.

The cherry tree, being on the side of the hill, was a vantage point. Below him the house, smothered in its ivy, lay without a sign of habitation. Beyond it the brook was marked out by the double line of weeping willows which had been planted on its banks, but no glint of water came through the green to prove its existence.

Directly ahead lay a gentle slope of meadow; and as Bryn's eyes fell upon it he caught quite distinctly a flash of blue across the green.

He blinked, started at it, stretched himself incautiously to make sure of what he saw. It had most certainly been a gown. He climbed down hastily from the tree and started off across the garden.

He came at last into the natural clearing which had once been the bottom of the stream; it was dotted over with clumps of small bushes, covered with a carpet of green velvet. He stopped and surveyed it for a moment before his eyes caught again that blue flash . . . ah, there she was.

Deborah was kneeling on the side of a little knoll, with a round blue bowl beside her. For a moment she did not see him approaching, so intent was she on her task. She was picking wild strawberries, leaning forward to separate them from their stems, dropping them one by one into the bowl. She was dressed in a short-sleeved blue dress, perhaps a little faded, but still extremely becoming.

She looked up, startled, her eyes wide and dark.

"Good-morning," Bryn offered cheerfully. "Did something happen to your clock, or do you usually get up at half-past five?"

She dropped a berry into the bowl. She lifted her stained little finger-tips and looked at them. "I usually get up," she replied.

Bryn dropped down comfortably on the grass a yard away.

She gathered her skirts together around her knees, rose, and moved farther away. "I don't think there are any berries left where you are," she remarked. "But you ought to look before you get down on the ground."

"I did look," Bryn replied. "You may not have seen me, Deborah, but I looked. My eye is very quick. I pride myself on it. To see one of nature's jewels shining among the dank and ugly grasses is one of the things I'm best at."

Across the knoll she regarded him steadily. "It sounds very poetic," she said at last.

"Deborah," Bryn began.

The color flashed back into her cheeks. "Must you call me that?" she demanded. "I didn't ask you to call me that. You haven't any right."

"I was about to discuss that very question myself," Bryn replied "I was about to ask you if we couldn't come to some sort of compromise."

"Compromise?"

"We got on very well on the trip up here. You didn't seem to mistrust me. But after we got here—yesterday at lunch, and last night at dinner, and in the drawing room later—you must admit it was difficult."

She lifted her chin. "You were so —familiar," she said proudly.

"Familiar?" he repeated.

"I don't think it was necessary. You . . . you talked as if . . . you looked at me . . . you . . . and you put your arm around Grandmother when you said good-night. I saw you."

"I couldn't help it," Bryn said mournfully. "She's a very nice grandmother, after all, isn't she? And I never saw one like her before. If you can imagine it, Deborah, I never had a grandmother of my own."

"I didn't like it. I won't have it. It's bad enough to . . . to deceive her at all, but I have to do that for her own good. I have to do what I've done. If I'd come back not married . . . and told her about . . . him, then we'd have had to tell her everything. How poor we are, and how desperate. And she would worry so much about me it would kill her. There wouldn't be anything ahead. This way, there's at least the money, and by the end of the year . . . but I won't take advantage of her. I can't bear to have you making so much of her when you don't mean it, when you're not honest."

"Don't you believe in love at first sight, Deborah?"

She sprang up and faced him. "That's what Gary said you'd start talking about next," she accused. "I think you might have better taste, if nothing else!"

"I suppose he compared me to a leech. I suppose he couldn't understand that a young man could enter into a business agreement with a young lady on perfectly clear and straightforward grounds, emotion having no part thereof?"

She raised her eyes. "Just a minute ago you started talking about . . . love at first sight!"

"My child, I was speaking of your grandmother. I intended to explain that my feeling for her was, in spite of your assumption to the contrary, honest. I was about to mention her gentleness, and her delicacy, and a few other qualities which would win the heart of a stone image, and to explain to you that any feeling of tenderness which I displayed toward her was quite sincere."

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

A CHILD is reputed to be the most defenseless of all animals. Its one and only weapon is its cry. It begins to use this weapon almost from its entry into the world. It cries to let the nurse know it is awake. It cries to let its mother know it is hungry. These are expected cries.

The cry becomes a weapon when it rings out with terror. This may be for fear of perfectly harmless things, and can be assuaged. I remember once, when my children were very small, that two little friends were playing with them on the veranda. A gentle summer shower came up. With the first few drops of rain, the older playmate took the hand of her small sister, and said:

"Come along, Doris, you know you always cry when it rains," and away went the two little folk, hand in hand, across the adjoining lawns to their home.

It was such a strange thing for a child to fear. But I discovered that they were afraid of other elements, and of cats, dogs, and other animals, and it was because the mother, herself was timid. She seemed never to attempt to down her apprehensions, nor to ward off the fears of her little children although, of course, she tried to shelter them. Tears flowed frequently and easily with them, but we, and the other neighbors, realizing there was nothing really for them to fear, ceased to worry over their distress.

Rescue.

In districts of congestion, chiefly in slums and crowded dwellings, the terrified cries of children have frequently been the direct cause of their relief. When these shrieks are heard repeatedly coming from the same quarters, there is reason to look into the cause.

A certain amount of crying of infants is their rightful privilege. But it is important to teach that tears cannot change decisions, nor make mother do what the little one wants. As the little folk grow, they develop other methods of protection than crying.

The normal child does not want to be stamped a cry baby and soon learns tears are unwarranted except under great stress.

Moderation.

Moderation is a word that seems to be entirely lacking in some persons' vocabularies. Hurry, rush, and similar words, crowd out the first idea. These people dash into enterprises, club work, friendships and all undertakings with such fervid zest that they use up their energy, until it is devitalized, and burn up their interest until it vanishes like smoke. They are continually starting new ventures, following new friendship trails and seeking new ways of being entertained.

Such avid pursuit of the special form of work or pleasure that is on the horizon at the moment, cannot fail to become exhausting, not alone of one's powers of labor in its behalf, but of one's interest in the special subject. A wornout interest like a wornout garment is discarded. Frequently it is with regret that one looks back on the fine things that have been dashed through because of too forced pressure of attention for too short a period.

Lasting Enjoyment.

The person who goes into either work or pleasure with zest, but not too eager haste to get everything out of it immediately, will find a more enduring interest in the occupation or a more lasting enjoyment in friendships, club activities, etc.

Everyone who has ridden a horse, played tennis, exercised in a gymnasium, or done calisthenics at home, knows that moderation must be used, or one will get lame, sore, and disqualified for a while. The moderate continuance of the sport or activity is necessary to get in good form.

So it is with the main things of life. Steady effort brings marked gain. It is built up by sustained pursuit of whatever one wants to accomplish. Success is made by successive steps up the rungs of its ladder. Friendships increase by added links in the chain. Moderation is the keystone, the magic idea back of the word.

Vines for Bathroom

An attractive bathroom seen recently has white-painted walls and a floor of black and gray design. The bath tub, set in an alcove, has several glass shelves on the wall at each end. The alcove is lighted indirectly, from above, and luxuriant ivy vines trail down the two tiers of shelves. Pale blue-gray Venetian blinds curtain the windows.

Porch Protection

Porch floors are subjected to excessive wear and all kinds of weather. Special exterior floor paints are manufactured to give the greatest amount of service possible. Cement porch floors, if they haven't been painted before, should first be primed with a special cement primer and then finished with four-hour cement floor paints.

Decorative features are hidden in the contrasting collar trimmed with ruffled edging, and brief puff sleeves. The material may be a printed percale, lawn linen or gingham. If it is made in a plaid or checked gingham, you can omit the ruffled edging from the collar and make the collar of plain white pique.

WORLD HAS NEED FOR JACK OF ALL TRADES, PROF. SAYS

Asking a lad what he intends to be when he grows up is apt to bring a more or less amusing response from the boy's limited viewpoint. While the proper selection of a lifetime occupation is an indispensable concomitant of getting somewhere, the earliest choice is not always the wisest, because the pattern of life usually unfolds various unexpected complications. Nevertheless a "jack of all trades" has traditionally been held in economic disrepute.

It is interesting, therefore, to hear from Dr. Harry Dexter Kitson, professor of education at Columbia, on the subject of vocational adaptability. Having just completed a survey of effective pupil guidance, Doctor Kitson suggests that young persons rid themselves of the notion that they are created for just one special occupation and should prepare themselves for two or more, the world having need for more "jacks of all trades." He points out that when one industry is dull, another is active; and thus the variously adept worker is assured of steady employment.

Broadly considered, the advantage of learning several things is that they contribute to one's feeling of independence, making for a fuller life. Occupational ignorance is never bliss, whereas personal versatility invariably saves one time, money, irritation, regret, and varied misgiving, above all adding to one's interest in life. And the more things a person can do, the more interesting he is to others, the more self-reliant, the more in tune with the zestful adventure of living.—Buffalo Courier-Express.

S. & E. DIRECTORS MEET AT DILLEY HOME

A most delightful meeting of the Social and Educational Directors of the Farm Bureau was held at the home of the county president, Mrs. Grace Dilley, Friday, June 5th. The weather being ideal, the meeting was held out doors on the shady lawn, where tables were spread, and forty two guests were seated to a bounteous pot luck dinner.

After dinner, to which all did justice with the possible exception of Co. Manager Frank Baltz, who lost his appetite about thirty minutes after the rest of the party had finished eating, the meeting was called to order by Mrs. Dilley. Secretary's report was read and approved. Talks were given by Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick on arranging township programs, Herald Yoder on the Farm Bureau mill, Herald Beber on the Study club, Albert Yoder, Frank Baltz and Mrs. Morris Hanson, District Social and Educational Director, discussed plans for Camp week which will be held at Lake James Christian assembly the last week in August.

One of the contestants of the Farm Bureau Mill essay contest, Miss Overholt, was present and read her essay which proved to be an interesting addition to the afternoon's pogram.

Mrs. Dilley has the thanks of every S. and E. director and county officer present for her hospitality, and for entertaining the group so charmingly, the day will long be one of pleasant memory.

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Receipts of fat hogs for last week's auction were light compared to previous weeks and the preceding sale owing to a fifteen to thirty cent drop in terminal markets; however a top price of $9.75 per cwt. was paid for hogs averaging 180 to 225 with heavier kings going slowly at from $8.85 to $9.25. The best roughs brought $7.95 with thin sows at $7.50 to $7.75. Feeder pigs and light yorks selling for feeding were about fifty cents to seventy five cents per head lower than last week but found a ready demand at this new price level, which did not seem out of line with fat hog prices. There is a slight easing up in the demand for sows with pigs.

The veal offering was made up of about twenty five head. This left buyers with less than half their orders filled. Most of the calves on sale were much below top quality, light rather thin calves weighing 150 and less going to the larger packers at from $7 to $8.50 while the best of the prime calves brought from $9.00 to $9.25. Day old calves found plenty of buyers at from two to four fifty per head.

Dairy cows are selling at steadily increasing prices in spite of generous receipts. Prices for cows showing quality and having a calf at their side ran from $50.00 to $74.00 per head. Slaughter cattle receipts were heavier than last week with a slightly lower price range; however packer buyers did not hold out for as much of a cut in price as reported from the terminal markets and the advantage was with the sellers rather than the buyers. Canners and low cutters brot from $3.75 to $4.25 per cwt. while the better fleshed and fat cows went from $4.35 to $5.65. An unusually large offering of butcher bulls failed to lower the price or demand and found a ready market from $5.00 up. There is a very active demand of late for young cattle of most any quality for pasture and anything weighing from 300 up brings prices very pleasing to the seller.

Farm Bureau co-operative associations are required to pay the state gross income tax just as any other retail dealer, according to an opinion of the Indiana Appellate court, which held that while the organization was not operating for profit to itself, the patrons derived an income from the transaction, thereby enhancing their income..

Fifty two detours now in effect on Indiana's nine-thousand-mile state highway system indicate the extensive modernization and improvement program being caried on this year by the State Highway Commission. In addition to the detours, there are eight points at which motorists are cautioned to drive carefully due to surface treating, shoulder construction or settlement of the highway and two points where temporary bridges carry traffic around new bridges under construction.

The practice of pasturing farm woodland is the most important forest conservation problem in the state. A good woods and a good pasture is like a road and a stream. Both are never found in the same place.

During the past six years, Indiana's yield of potatoes has increased approximately 20 bushels per acre. Yet, with increased acres and yields per acre, Indiana still is short of fulfilling the needs per capita consumption.

A PLEDGE OF FREEDOM.... AN ELECTRIC RANGE.
I TAKE thee to be my wedded Wife, to have and to hold from this day forward, for better for worse, for richer for poorer, in sickness and in health, to love and to cherish, till death us do part.

"To love and cherish her"

WHEN you promised to love and cherish her, you didn't contemplate making a kitchen slave of your wife. Yet that is what it amounts to if she has to toil over an old-fashioned, roasting hot stove through the humidity of summer.

With an electric range, a whole meal including the roast, may be prepared in the oven at a temperature so cool that flowers will not wilt standing on the range. Better than that, your wife can cook a delicious meal entirely by automatic control and spend her time on lovely afternoons out-of-doors or at whatever recreation she prefers.

An Electric Range is a pledge of freedom for the housewife. Select your range right now!

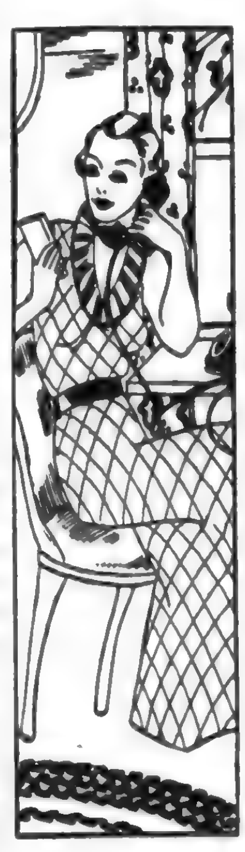
The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

PERSONS who dislike to telephone, probably have one reason, unsuspected, that gives this feeling. This is that their telephone desk is not properly equipped. How often do all of us hear:

"Just wait a minute, please, until I get a pencil and paper, to jot down what you say," whenever we wish to leave a message, or when the person talked to wants to help her memory about a date, or anything that requires definite remembrance.



So let us start our telephone desk furnishings with a pad and a pencil, not a loose pencil that can be taken away absent mindedly, but one that is secured either to the desk or to the pad. Strange as it may seem, it is difficult to get an ordinary pencil with a ring at the end or attached to it in any way. And pads seldom come provided with pencils fastened to them.

Once I became so discouraged in my search that finally, in despair, I drilled a hole through the metal of an eraser tip on a pencil (first removing the eraser), ran a fine cord through it, leaving a long end of cord, and this I tied to the desk. Ever since then, taking down notes has been a simple matter, for a pad, too large to be thoughtlessly removed, is by the phone. By the way if you want a small fancy pencil, there are some kinds that can be had with ring-ends. Personally I want a regular pencil, not a fancy one that is liable to get out of order. But whatever kind you choose be sure to secure it to pad or desk, and have plenty of leeway in length of fastening.

Let me suggest that pad-sheets have message transferred to their proper places quickly, lest they be lost. Put any telephone numbers in the telephone address book or file on the desk. This brings up the subject of these books. They are essential unless we prefer a file. Many persons do. An excellent file can be made from any small alphabetically arranged box file. The advantage of this filing system, is that cards can be eliminated when not needed. Consulting the files is easy.

Calendar.

Don't omit a calendar. It can be attached to the pad. Such combinations of calendar and pad are among the desk accessories on the market If preferred the calendar can hang above the desk.

Keep the desk clear of extraneous articles. Slips of paper on which messages have been written will get lost at times, and someone in the household will be puzzled and annoyed. Each person should look out for her own messages, and when she gets those for others not present, she should deliver them promptly, or put the written note in some place where a message will be found soon after the absent one returns. Co-operation, order, and correct desk equipments, make telephoning more pleasurable.

Sustained Effort.

There is nothing like sustained effort to win out in whatever you attempt to do. Working "by inspiration," as the saying goes, is a fine idea during periods of inspiration; but unless these periods are very frequent, accomplishment is little. It is when you continue to plod along in the interims between these inspirational times, that the total of what you do sums up well.

This is no plea for plodding. There is a vast difference between plodding and sustained effort. The plodder gets into a routine of work that becomes mechanical in its monotonous repetition of tasks in sequence.

The persons who work only when they feel like it, and it is amazing the number of such workers, often work with an ardor when they do, that is devastating to their constitutions. When the zeal is spent, so are their physiques. Such persons scarcely know the meaning of moderation. They intermittently work furiously and collapse in rest. Nerves get on edge and spirits fluctuate.

Wise Working

To work when one fels like it is the part of wisdom. To train oneself to work, not grudgingly or unwillingly, but moderately a specific number of hours daily, except Sunday, is also wise. It is the union of these methods that makes a system of sustained accomplishment that brings the greatest results.

Saved the "Surface"

Prehistoric man in America almost universally used pigments of different colors to decorate his face and body. This custom is ordinarily interpreted as due to desire for adornment, but the paint may have been used for protecing the skin against the sun's rays.

Spots on Furniture

White spots on furniture caused by heat can be removed by a cloth which has been saturated with wood alcohol. Wipe dry and polish with a clean soft cloth.

SOME HINTS FOR PICNIC SEASON

Two Types of Outdoor Meals to Select From.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THERE are two different types of picnic meals, either of which will fit your plans at different times. There is the sandwich, cake, thermos bottle picnic which may be eaten in or out of the car and which is all prepared before leaving the house; and there is the cooked picnic meal which is prepared out of doors over an open fire. This is the one that the men usually like the best and for which they are sometimes quite ready to do the actual cooking as well as their regular duty of making the fire.

This kind of a meal is a great help to a busy woman and she is fortunate if there is within a short distance a picnic spot which can be reached quickly and easily. Some time it may be an impromptu picnic when the food which was to have been cooked at home for the regular evening meal is gathered into a basket and taken along to be cooked in the woods or at the shore.

If the picnic cups, plates, knives and forks, spoons, salt and pepper, and sugar are all kept ready on a shelf in the cupboard reserved for this, perhaps in the picnic hamper, you will be sure that no essentials are forgotten.

Broiled steak, ham or bacon are always favorite picnic meats. They do have a special flavor when cooked over the coals. If you have time potatoes wrapped in wet newspapers bake perfectly after there is a bed of coals. Sweet potatoes cook more quickly than white potatoes. A metal dish of creamed potatoes prepared at home can be reheated, however, while the coffee is coming to a boil and the steak broiling. If you have never tried broiled buttered toast, do put it on your next picnic plan. It means first of all, finding some nice green twigs and whittling the ends to a nice point. The bread is then buttered on the loaf and the slices cut almost an inch thick. The bread is then put on the stick and toasted over the coals. The bacon can be broiled on these sticks, too, and put on the toast or between rolls.

Frankfurters are also favorites for broiling either individually on sticks or together in a wire broiler. When corn is in season it can be roasted in the ashes like the potatoes.

Jelly, pickles and a vegetable salad or small whole small tomatoes go well with these suggested combinations. Rolls may be plain or toasted if you do not care to make toast.

If the little children who have their supper at night come to an early picnic supper, a box of ready-to-eat cereal, some bread and butter, and jelly or lettuce sandwiches, a cookie or some apple sauce, may be taken along for them.

Picnic Scrambled Eggs.

6 to 8 slices bacon
6 to 8 eggs
¾ cup milk
6 ears or 1 can whole kernel corn
Salt
Pepper

Fry the bacon to a delicate brown. Remove the strips from the fat and cut in small pieces. Beat the eggs slightly, add milk, corn, bacon and seasoning. Cook in the bacon fat, stirring constantly until set. Water may replace the milk.

Hot Hamburger Sandwiches

1 onion, finely chopped
1 tablespoon butter
1 pound round steak, finely chopped
1 tablespoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk

Saute the onion in the butter two minutes. Add the meat, salt and pepper and stir until brown. Stir in flour and add the milk and stir until thick. Serve on slices of buttered toast.

Stewed Potatoes.

3 tablespoons butter
3 cups diced potatoes
Salt and pepper
2 cups milk

Melt the butter in frying pan, add the potatoes, seasoning and stir over the fire until fat is absorbed. Add milk and cook slowly about half an hour. More milk may be added if necessary.

Sandwiches.

Bread
Butter
Peanut butter
Orange marmalade

Cream the butter and spread on the loaf before cutting into thin slices. Use three slices of bread for each sandwich and spread the first with marmalade and the second with peanut butter before putting them together. Cover with the third slice and cut into halves. Wrap in oiled paper.

Soft Molasses Cookies.

2 eggs
¾ cup oil or melted shortening
1 cup sugar
1 cup molasses
4 cups pastry flour
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
2 teaspoons cinnamon
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon salt
⅓ cup coffee

Beat eggs slightly and add other ingredients in order given, and drop by spoonfuls onto oiled baking sheet and bake in moderate oven 350 degrees F., five to eight minutes. Add more flour if you prefer a thick cookie.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and
ELMO SCOTT WATSON

California, Here I Come

SOMEONE besides the movie press ought to get busy and sing the praises of California. For California always does things on the grand scale.

A couple of visitors from Connecticut went out there one summer. One of them was so overawed by the size of California mountains that he turned back home, but the other remained.

This fellow stayed one night at the house of a native Californian. He confessed, at breakfast, he liked an egg and he liked it soft boiled. What did they do but wheel in an egg the size of a flour barrel, place it beside the lady of the house and chisel into it with a billiard cue.

When questioned, the host confessed that the egg wasn't the work of a single hen but had been laid co-operatively by his entire flock.

After breakfast the visitor left. He reached a river before noon and was ferried across by a strange-appearing craft.

"Is this business a paying one?" he asked the ferryman.

"Hardly enough to pay for raising the boat, stranger," was the reply. "This boat was grown as a pumpkin, mister. Cut from a pumpkin shell, raised in that patch over thar."

"Over by that barn?" asked the visitor from Connecticut.

"Barn?" replied the native. "Say, that was a pumpkin, too. But I blasted a hole in it and now I let the stock inside whenever there's wet weather ahead."

Dog Tale

THE year Paul Bunyan established his lumber camp on the Big Onion river he had a great deal of trouble with rats and mice. They ate up the scraps of buffalo milk pancakes that Big Joe, his camp cook, made and grew to be as big as two-year-old bears.

So Paul sent over to Michigan and got a pup that was part wolf and part elephant hound and began feeding him on bear milk. In a little while this pup, whom Paul named Sport, was big enough to clean up all the rats and mice around the camp, so Paul decided to send him after bigger game. He trained Sport to become a moose terrier and all Big Joe had to say was "Sport, go out and get me a mess of moose," and Sport would do it.

One night Sport was playing around the horse barn when Paul mistook him for a mouse. Quick as a flash he hurled an ax at the animal and to his horror found that he had cut Sport in two. Quickly realizing his mistake, Paul picked up the two halves, stuck them together, gave the dog first aid and bandaged him up with strips torn from 87 horse blankets.

The next morning Paul discovered that in his haste he had twisted Sport's two halves so that the hind legs pointed straight up. But this proved to be an advantage after all, for the dog learned to run on two legs a while, then flop over without loss of speed and run on the other two.

Sport was a good trailer, too. Once when he was out in the woods with Paul they discovered the skeleton of a moose that had died of old age. Just out of curiosity Paul picked up the back tracks of the moose and showed them to Sport. So the dog started back over the moose's trail, and before sunset he had led Paul clear back to the place where the moose was born.

The Grateful Rattlesnake

C. M. TATHAM, editor of the Sabine County Reporter at Hemphill, Texas, doesn't agree with most people that the rattlesnake is always cold-hearted. That's because of an experience of a farmer in his community.

This farmer found a rattlesnake caught in a steel-trap. Taking pity on the snake, he released it and it quickly slid away in the chaparral.

But imagine his surprise, upon returning home, to find that the rattlesnake had followed him. The reptile acted so friendly that the farmer didn't have the heart to drive it away and it soon became one of his favorite pets.

That winter the farmer moved from his ranch into town. The snake again followed him and made its home under the house. One cold night it coiled up on the doorstep and looked so pathetic that the farmer allowed it to sleep under the stove in the kitchen.

The next morning the farmer heard a commotion downstairs. Rushing into the kitchen he saw a strange sight. A burglar was trying desperately to release himself from the grip of the snake which was coiled tightly around his neck with its tail stuck out the opened window and rattling frantically. A moment later a squad of police burst into the kitchen door. They had heard the snake's burglar alarm and had come to capture the culprit and lead him away to jail.

The Rings of Saturn

The rings of Saturn spin around the planet rapidly. It is believed that they consist of a swarm of separate particles, each following its own independent orbit. By means of a spectroscope the velocity of any point of the ring has been determined and it has been found that particles on the inner edge of the ring revolve about the planet in approximately five hours, while those on the outer edge require about 14 hours for one revolution.

Close Observation

IT IS the close observation of little things which is the secret of success in business, in art, in science, and in every pursuit in life. Human knowledge is but an accumulation of small facts, made by successive generations of men—the little bits of knowledge and experience carefully treasured up and growing at length into a mighty pyramid.—Samuel Smiles.

A good name lost is seldom regained.—When character is gone, all is gone, and one of the richest jewels of life is lost forever.—J. Hawes.

IT'S TIME TO PLAN SEASON'S CANNING; VARIOUS METHODS

With Mother Nature bursting into bloom, filling the earth with warm sunshine and growing vegetation, we know it is time to plan the season's canning and give some thought to canning methods.

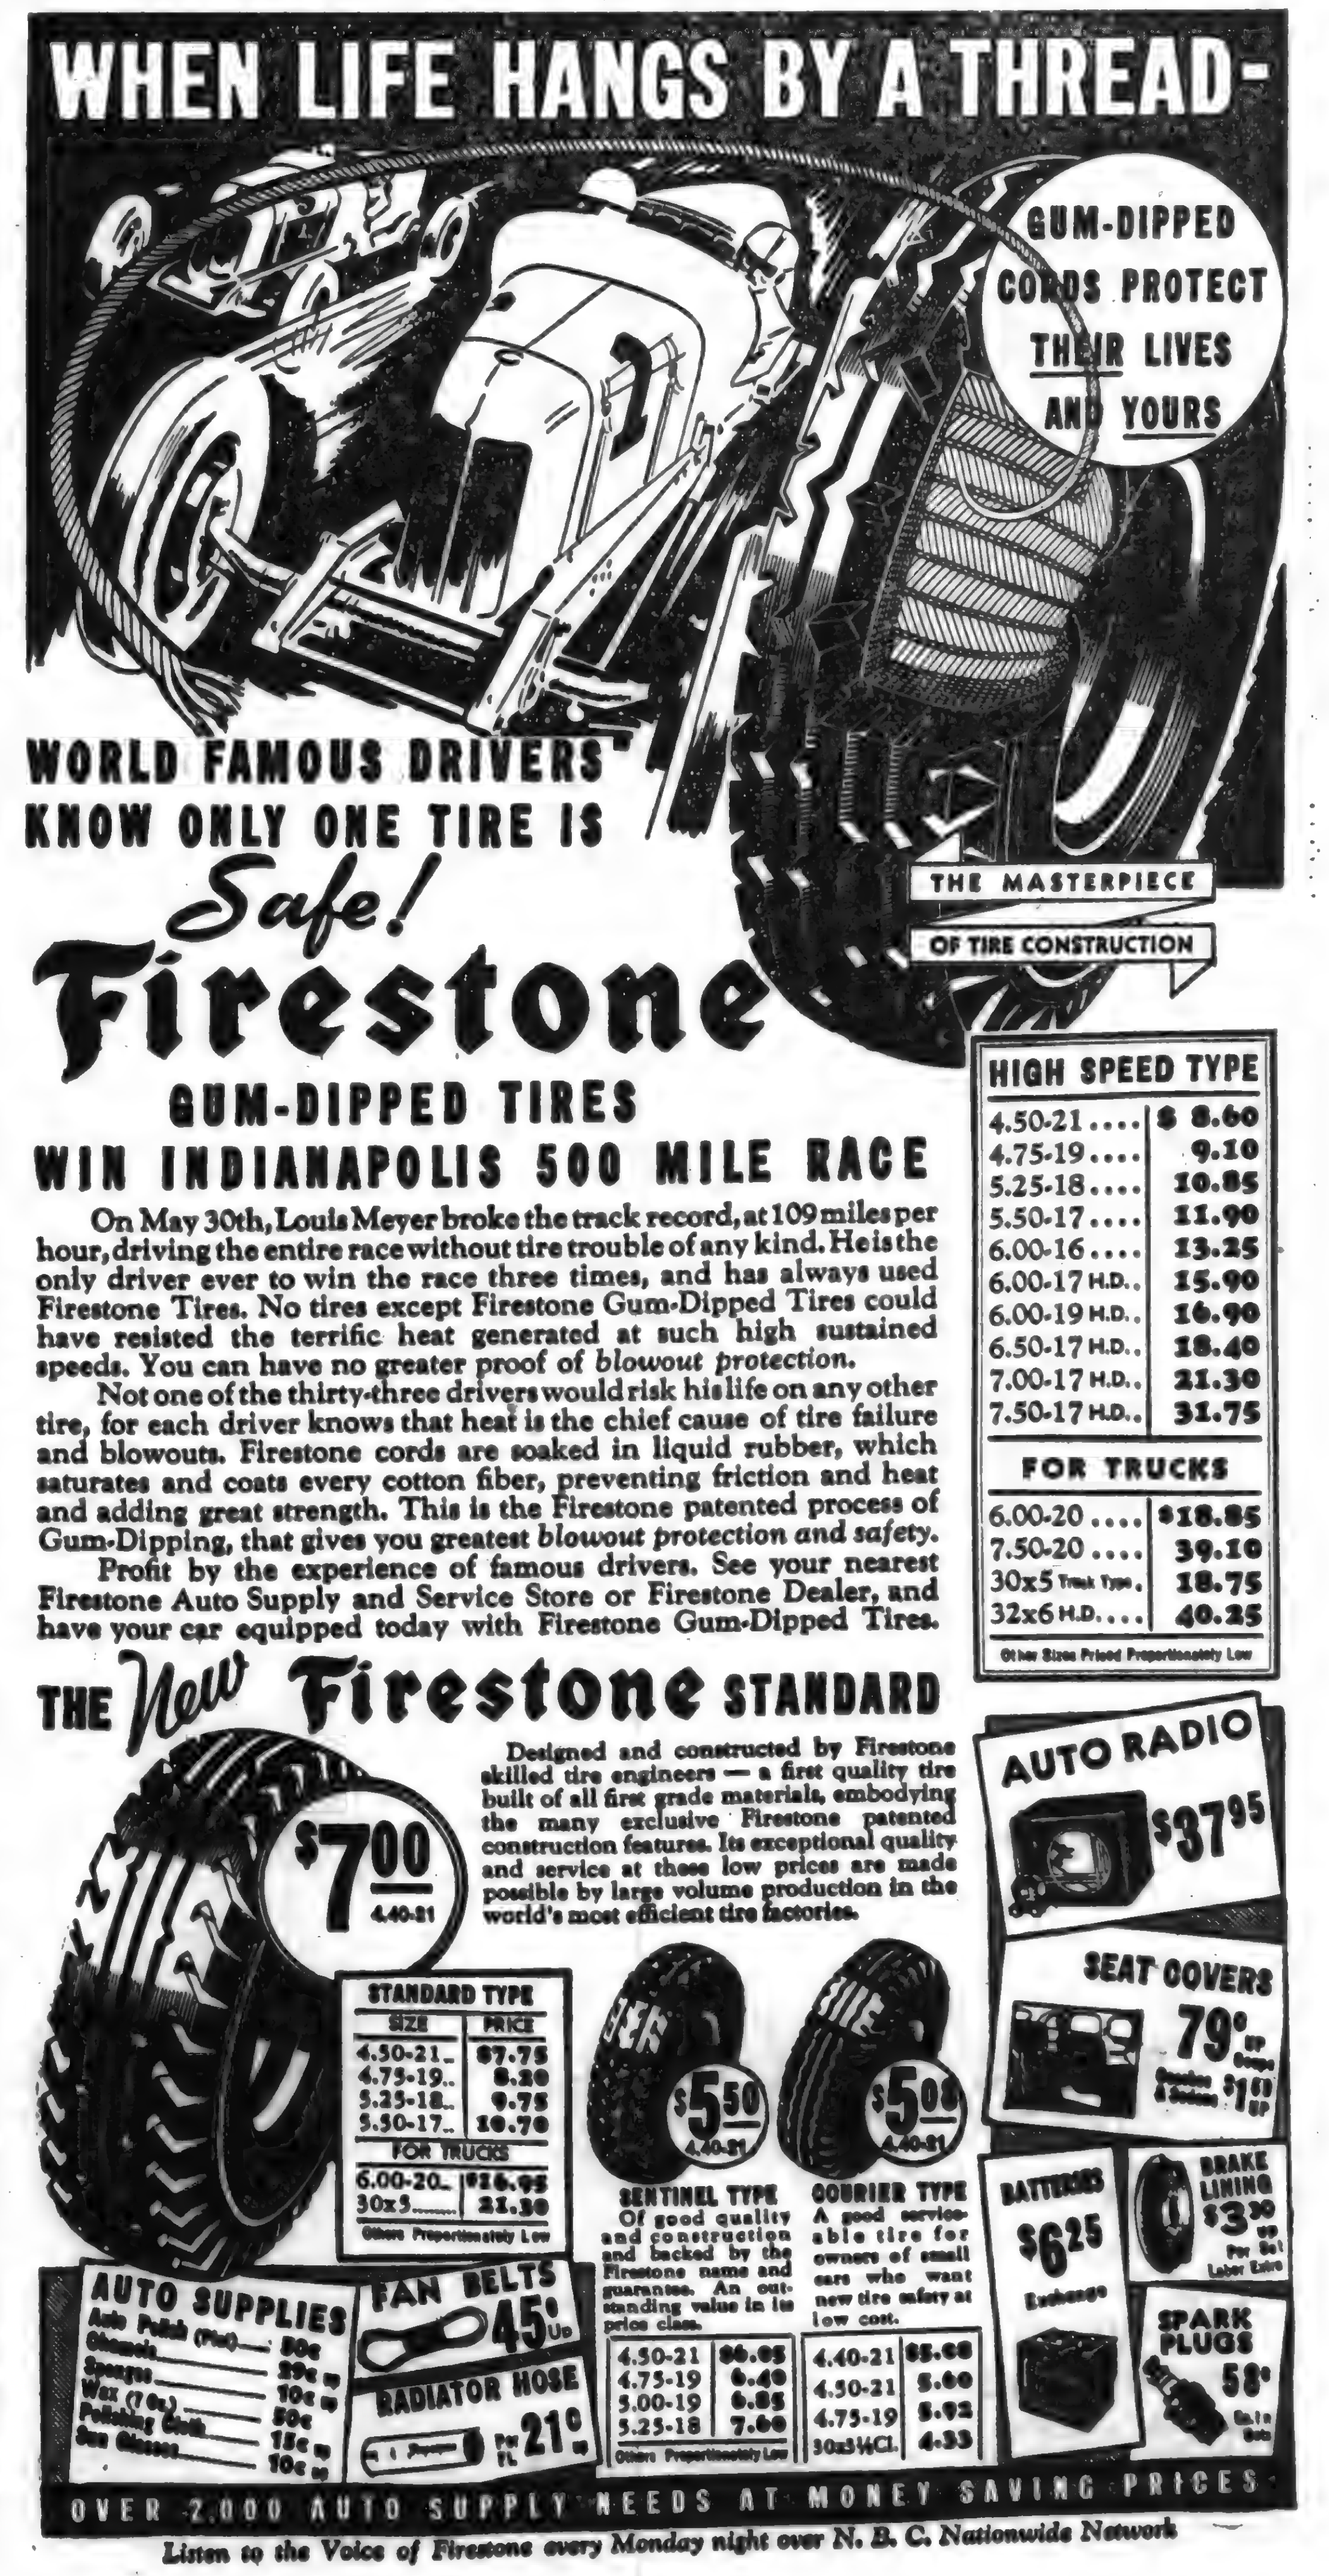
"Open kettle" canning is recommended only for fruits, tomatoes, preserves, relishes, etc., and only one jar must be filled at a time with the boiling product, and then sealed immediately. The "hot" or "cold pack" method simply means that the product is cooked directly in the jars. For "hot pack" food is precooked a short period of time and then packed hot into the jars. For "cold pack" food is pre-cooked, then cold-dipped and packed into jars, or packed right in the jars cold without precooking.

The product for canning should be carefully selected and thoroughly cleansed. Small fruits and berries are usually packed into the jars raw, a hot sirup added to within one and one-half inches of the top, caps adjusted, and the jars processed. Vegetables are precooked for a few minutes and packed into the jars while hot, the caps adjusted and the filled jars gotten into the canner immediately for processing.

It is also important to know how to handle the type of jar cap that you are using correctly. For the self-sealing cap, which consists of screw band and lid, place lid on the jar with sealing composition next to the glass, and screw the band firmly tight. Because this cap does not seal until the contents of the jar are cold, the self-sealing cap is always tightened down firmly before the jars are placed in the canner to process. At the end of the processing period the jars with the selfsealing caps are removed from the canner and set right side up to cool. There is no further tightening of the cap. Twenty-four hours after the canning is done the screw band may be removed and jars stored away.

When using the zinc top jars, jars are only partly sealed before placing in the cooker, and processed immediately. At the end of processing time, remove from the cooker, one at a time, and seal immediately. When jars are cold, invert for two or three hours, then examine for leaks.

For the glass-top jars which covers are held in place with a wire ball, these too are only partially sealed before processing, the seal being completed at the end of processing.



On May 30th, Louis Meyer broke the track record, at 109 miles per hour, driving the entire race without tire trouble of any kind. He is the only driver ever to win the race three times, and has always used Firestone Tires. No tires except Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires could have resisted the terrific heat generated at such high sustained speeds. You can have no greater proof of blowout protection.

Not one of the thirty-three drivers would risk his life on any other tire, for each driver knows that heat is the chief cause of tire failure and blowouts. Firestone cords are soaked in liquid rubber, which saturates and coats every cotton fiber, preventing friction and heat and adding great strength. This is the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping, that gives you greatest blowout protection and safety.

Profit by the experience of famous drivers. See your nearest Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer, and have your car equipped today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married. Tubby and Bryn await Deborah in a hotel in Frisco. Over a period of one year the groom is to prove he is no fortune hunter and can make Deborah happy to the satisfaction of her grandmother. Otherwise the fortune is to go to charity. The will is somewhat ambiguous as to whom Deborah is to marry. The girl arrives with Holworthy. Tubby is surprised to find her charming and sweet. The wedding over, the couple arrives at the home of Deborah's grandmother. The grandmother and Bryn, who she believes to be Stuart, take to one another, which somewhat displeases Deborah, who foresees difficulty when they are to separate after a year. Deborah remonstrates with Bryn for his familiarity and insincerity. Bryn declares he is sincere.

She was gazing into his face. A slow wave of color, quite unlike the angry flush of a short time ago, began to spread up from her throat over her face. She dropped her eyes.

"As for you," Bryn went on calmly, "it would be most presumptuous for me to have any feeling for you whatever. You are, in a sense, my employer. I recognize that. I have no idea of presuming on that relationship. Nothing could be farther from my mind. However—it might be easier for both of us, under the circumstances, if we came to a definite agreement as to my duties and my attitude. Obviously we cannot go on as we began yesterday, or all our plans and sacrifices so far are wasted."

She had turned away and was surveying the eastern horizon. Now she faced him. "Did you make sacrifices to do this for me?" she demanded.

"Nothing of any particular importance," he replied calmly. "Nothing that will not be far outweighed by the benefits I will receive from it. However, a year is a year."

She considered. "I'm afraid I was very thoughtless."

She began to smile. "I suppose there's even another girl somewhere out in the world," she said with a breath of relief. "I am a stupid creature. I might have guessed. It's because we're so self-centered here. To put it perfectly plainly, you have been exerting yourself to the utmost to live up to your bargain, and I've been ridiculous about it. Haven't I? I'm sorry. It's going to be . . ." she bent hastily and lifted her bowl. "I think I have enough," she went on.

Bryn took the bowl. They walked along leisurely toward the house. The sun had suddenly thrown off his veils of cloud and emerged in glory.

Entering the kitchen together, they found Gary there. "This is certainly an early-rising household," remarked Bryn. "'Up with the birds,' must be its motto."

Bryn put down his coffee cup, Gary having served them in the sitting room. He reached into his pocket mechanically for his cigarette case. "Mind if I smoke?"

Across the low round table, Deborah shook her head.

"You told me . . . and Mr. Holworthy told me, too, that . . . that a divorce is easy to get nowadays."

"Very easy."

"I didn't ask you," she went on slowly, "something I should have asked. In Grandmother's day a divorce was dreadful. I'd scarcely heard them mentioned. A divorce was a disgraceful thing. Tell me, is it a disgraceful thing to be divorced? Does it . . . mark one?"

"We can manage it so quietly that no one will know you've been married, Deborah."

"I wasn't thinking exactly of myself," she said, faint color in her cheeks. "Nobody knows me. It wouldn't matter. I was thinking of you. I was wondering if the . . . the girl you . . . that is, the girl you care about won't mind rather dreadfully. I don't quite understand these things," she hurried on, "but I think if I were she I should mind."

"Did I say I cared about a girl?" Bryn inquired, in surprise.

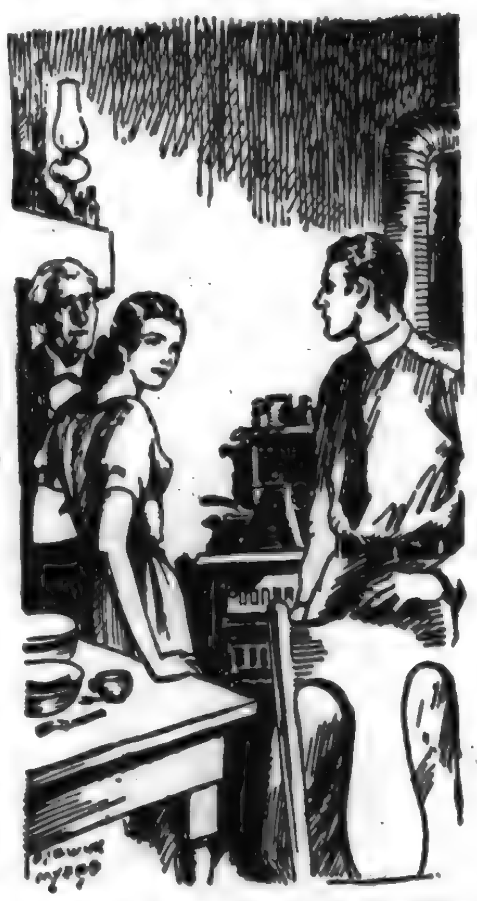
"Perhaps I saw for myself that there must be one. You spoke of sacrifices. You couldn't have meant your career, because you told me yourself it was at a standstill, and would be assisted by this agreement of ours. And . . . I saw quite a lot of other young men," she said, scarlet, but determined, "and it seems to me that you and your friend, Mr. Forbes, were much the . . . the most attractive. So there must be a girl. I am glad, of course. It will make Gary feel much better. But has the world become so liberal-minded that she won't mind your taking this way to earn money for her?" Her eyes lifted to his, waiting.

Bryn considered. If he said there was no girl, Deborah might take fright again. Gary, thoroughly conscious of the amount of loveliness and charm and innocence which Deborah possessed, would certainly do what he could to spoil this friendliness and trust which were beginning to spring to life.

"I must tell Tubby what you said about him," he said lightly. "He will be extremely flattered, as I am. And grateful. As for your other question—I can assure you that no complication will arise."

She had begun to speak, perhaps to question him further, when a bell tinkled inside the kitchen. She rose hastily. "That's Grandmother," she explained, and hurried down the steps to the narrow side door into the kitchen. Bryn sat down again and lit another cigarette, thinking.

He recalled himself with a start, and got up hastily. He lifted the table, dishes and all, and carried it down to the kitchen door. He set it inside, went in, and drew it across the big room to the long white porcelain sink beneath the windows. Gary was there, with a big, clean apron tied over his trousers, washing up his own breakfast dishes. Deborah was not in sight.



"This Is Certainly an Early-Rising Household," Remarked Bryn.

"It's a beautiful day, Gary."

"Yes, sir. We've days like this all through the summer. It gets very hot in the middle of the day in August, but the nights are always cool."

Bryn picked up a dish-towel. "What are you going to do today, Gary? Can you give me some kind of an idea of your routine? I've got to have something to do, too."

Gary glanced up at him from under his bushy brows. "There's enough to do," he said slowly. "But it's not likely the kind of work you've been used to."

"Well, I can pick cherries. Deborah said you could use them. I suppose the strawberries in the patch have to be picked, too, haven't they? And I heard hens cackling somewhere, although I didn't see them. I presume your fowl have the usual set of signals. So I can collect eggs."

Gary sighed. He rubbed vigorously at a plate. "All them things has to be done," he said. "And there's potatoes to hoe and corn to weed, and cucumbers and melons to water, and raspberries to tie up, and there's some branches of the apricot trees needing propping, I noticed yesterday." He propped his hands on the edge of the sink and looked up. "If you want to work," he said, "there's plenty to be done."

Bryn put a foot on the chair beside the sink. "Had your hands full, hadn't you?" he said.

Gary did not reply. He was still searching Bryn's face. Bryn met his eyes steadily. After a moment Gary turned away, without speaking, and finished washing the sink. He was just untying his apron to hang it up when there was a light footstep at the other end of the room, and Deborah came in. She was very pale, and there was in her face such a look of misery that both men stiffened themselves involuntarily.

"Grandmother liked the strawberries," Deborah said dismally. "She thought they were wonderful." She might have been announcing the end of the world.

"What's happened?" Gary asked again, his face working. "What's the matter, Miss Deborah? Did you tell her? Did she guess about . . ." his eyes went to Bryn.

Deborah shook her head. From her pocket she produced a long sheet of paper. "There," she said tremulously, "That's our marketing list for today."

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

SHEEP: The first offering of spring lambs made their appearance this week and brought $9.70 per cwt. while an offering of broken mouthed ewes with lambs at side sold at $7.00 per head.

HOGS: Offerings of fat hogs were not as generous as a week ago and some orders from eastern markets had to go unfilled because buyers for packers nearer home were willing to pay a premium. Prices were out of line with surrounding markets choice weights, ranging from 180 to 230, finding ready sale at $9.95. Heavy hogs selling from $9.45 to $9.75. Roughs went to the larger packers at from $7.85 to $8.35. Boars $5.10 to $5.25. Feeder shoats showing plenty of breeding and quality found new homes selling by the head at from eleven to twelve cents per pound. Sows with pigs at heal were slightly lower than a week ago, most of the offerings being under size with small litters and going at from $22.50 to $31.00.

CALVES: Receipts of veals were light, totaling about one half of last week's number. The top was paid by Kuhner Packing Co., of Fort Wayne, who took the choice of $9.20 per cwt. common and medium descriptions, under weights, 150 and less, thin calves and grassers, going at from $5.10 to $9.00. It was a very satisfactory market for consigners as our top was above terminal markets.

CATTLE: Dry fed steers and heifers responded to a falling market by staying off the market; however, light heifers and steers suitable for pasture sold at prices equal to last week and there were plenty of bidders who were not supplied. The offerings were native kinds showing some dairy breeding but were taken readily at from $5.00 to $7.50 per cwt. Thin and low cutter cows brought $3.95 to $4.40 while the better fleshed cows were taken up to $5.30. Some heifers showing enough flesh to attract small butchers broght from $6.00 to $7.00. Bulls were much in demand by larger packers at from $5.75 to $5.95 depending on flesh and dressing per cent and one sale of a light bull weighing 560 was made at $6.50.

The total receipts for all departments was higher than last week.

The Graduate— And Opportunity

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

From schools and colleges throughout our nation thousands of young Americans are striding forth as this is written, in eager search of the opportunity to prove their powers.

What words of encouragement are offered them?

That depends on whose messages they hear.

At many commencement exercises real words of inspiration have been spoken. But from other platforms, from the lips of the new economic and political sooth-sayers, continues to sound that philosophy of despair adopted in recent years from the fears and the pessimism of Europe.

It seeks to convince young America that the era of opportunity is ended; that pride in one's own strength and courage and self-reliance is not only futile, but old-fashioned; that youth must learn to depend on government and the politicians to guide its life and supply its wants.

It is an un-American doctrine. The career of Abraham Lincoln, who rose from the log cabin to the pinnacle of statesmanship, has proved its falsity. So have the lives of the Wright brothers, who began as bicycle repair men and gave us the airplane; of Edison, the train boy, who made electricity perform new miracles; of Henry Ford, one-time obscure mechanic—and of countless American leaders in our public and professional and commercial life today.

Such men would have turned deaf ears to that swan-song of Americanism which now swells from so large a group of our politicians. They listened instead to "the Eagle's Song: to be staunch and valiant, and free, and strong."

Despite the newer pessimists, America continues to offer careers to all who hear that message.

Opportunity, like Freedom, has still a continent to live in."

Birthplace of Maya Culture Sought in Central America

Ancient Indians Had Amazing Civilization

WASHINGTON.—The spotlight of discovery is focusing on the land of the Mayas. It looks as though news of ancient America's greatest civilization would break there soon.

An expedition is already digging in the very region where the most learned students of America's past have pointed, as the likely birthplace of the magnificent Mayan civilization. And that is in the highlands of Guatemala, south of Mexico.

Explorers heretofore have unearthed ruined cities of the Mayas in jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala. They have revealed these ancient Indians as master builders, astronomers, mathematicians, and inventors of a writing system. Belated respect is paid the Mayan calendar. It was more accurate than the calendar of Spain, when the Spaniards arrived in America and set about civilizing the benighted savages.

Baffling Question.

But what has baffled science is to explain when and where so extraordinary a civilization got its start.

So, the expedition of the Carnegie institution of Washington, which has launched on a campaign to explore mounds in the highland region, in the suburbs of Guatemala City, is being closely watched.

It was in the hill country, by the generally accepted theory, that the Mayas or their forefathers learned to plant corn. And when they became stable farmers, then their star rose.

Find Old Site.

At the site chosen for digging, discoveries have already been reported by Dr. A. V. Kidder, expedition leader. A stucco pyramid, three times rebuilt, and tombs containing pottery of great interest, are the initial finds. How old will the site turn out to be?

Potsherds found at the same site some years ago were hesitantly pronounced "early." Since then, archaeologists have accumulated more knowledge for establishing the antiquity of Mayan remains, as far back as the history has been pushed. The oldest known Mayan city, Uaxactun, goes back to several centuries before Christ.

Air Flow Curtain Protects Bridge of Liner Queen Mary

LONDON.—The use of aerodynamics and attention to air flow will make it possible for officers of the S. S. Queen Mary to stand on the navigating bridge, in open air, and yet be protected from the weather. An invisible, but no less real, curtain of air helps accomplish the feat.

The forward edge of the navigating bridge has a solid guard sheet curved forward which has, along the upper edge, an additional sheet of metal separated slightly from it. As the ship moves forward the curved portion catches the air and directs it upward through the slot arrangement.

This high-pressure curtain of air flows upward higher than a man's head before it is swept backward. Thus the navigating officers, standing behind the guard sheet, are in an area of low air pressure and protected from wind, rain, or snow which goes over their heads.

Has Wide Bridge.

Other features of the navigating bridge are of interest. So wide is the bridge that when navigating in port the officers standing at its ends are 12 feet out from the side of the vessel. For their protection both ends of the bridge have small houses where the officers are out of the weather.

Face Nerves Get Mixed As Aftermath of Injury

DURHAM, N. C.—Fibers of a facial nerve, recovering after an injury, may get mixed up and grow back to supply the wrong facial muscles, it appears from studies reported by Drs. Howard A. Howe and Sarah S. Tower, Johns Hopkins Medical school, at the meeting here recently of the American Association of Anatomists.

The studies were made on monkeys. The effects on the animals' face muscles of the nerve fiber mix-ups were considered similar to the tics that appear in man following injury to the facial nerve.

The reason for the facial twitchings and peculiar expressions following injury to the nerve appears to be roughly as follows: The nerve, recovering from the injury, sends out new fibers but these do not grow back to supply the same muscle fibers as before.

Yugoslavia Is Rich Field for Future Archeology Study

Traces of Prehistoric Man Found by Searchers

YUGOSLAVIA is one of the spots on the world map where archeologists expect to unearth important news of prehistory.

This answer to the popular question, "How do archeologists decide where to dig?" was brought out at Evanston, Ill., at the meeting of the Central section of the American Anthropological association.

Recent American expeditions, led by Dr. Vladimir Fewkes, have taken the lay of the land in Yugoslavia. By tramping over the ground north of Greece, where ancient men must have wandered and camped and traded, the pre-historians have studied the important geographic factors. The Danube river valley was a main highway, a sort of funnel through which traffic took lines of least resistance between the Near East and Europe.

Task Is Extensive.

Yugoslavia's own scientific institutions are making field explorations, but the task certainly cannot be accomplished by them alone, Robert McCormick Adams of the University of Chicago reported to the meeting of anthropologists.

Mr. Adams, who has worked with the American expeditions in Yugoslavia, told of discoveries which are regarded as a beginning.

Only a few traces of Old Stone age man have yet been found in Yugoslavia, though the cave dwellers of that long dark age must have frequented this "highway" country.

Stone Age Traces.

The New Stone age is clearer, from discovery and excavation of sites where people settled and practiced the new arts of farming, raising domestic animals, making good pottery and building wattle and daub houses.

What Yugoslavia was like in the Bronze and Iron ages has only begun to unfold.

It has been estimated, said Mr. Adams, that there are 100,000 Bronze and Iron age tumuli—or mounds—alone in southern Yugoslavia and Macedonia.

May Plan Future Industrial Growth on Geography Basis

PHILADELPHIA.—Economic geography is the basis on which the nation might well solve its troubles of the migration of industry from one region to another, and the resulting problem of a stranded population without employment, said Albert S. Carlson of Dartmouth college, before the Franklin institute here recently.

Mr. Carlson, instructor in economic geography, declared:

"As a nation we are just beginning to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment problem. We are applying some intelligence to its solution, but only a small modicum of the knowledge and ability available. We are merely beginning when we are able to determine the number and character of those who are permanently displaced from the industries of a particular town. What are we going to do about it? There are three possibilities. We may provide relief for them and allow normal forces to work themselves out as best they may. It is unthinkable that we should proceed along this route much longer. What else can we do? We can develop new industries in these towns.

Moving Population.

When this cannot be done profitably there is only one other possibility. That is to have responsible agencies suggest other regions where there are better opportunities for the stranded population. We can do this only when we recognize the remarkable possibilities for appraisal of present and future regional trends in the economic-geographic approach to social problems.

"We have reached a stage in the evolution of our national life when the results of scientific research must be consciously related to our social life. Modern geography offers a most valuable method for the co-operation of the social and natural sciences in the solving of our most fundamental national problem. This problem may be stated as the proper and more rapid correlation of all the changing factors operating in a region as science continually evolves new techniques that require new social adjustments."

31-Pound Gold Nugget Found in Ural Mountains

MOSCOW.—Studies of the two giant gold nuggets discovered in the Tyelguin mine in the Ural mountains have now been completed here. Their weights, as finally established, are 9,420 and 14,318 grams respectively or approximately 21 and 31.5 pounds.

The nuggets are quite unique and have a very interesting structure. Each nugget represents a very fine transparent net consisting of lamellar, octagonal, needleshaped and wireshaped gold crystals forming concretions.

More Gay Prints! More Gay Flowers!

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

MORE, more, more! And still fashion keeps calling for more gay prints in the spring and summer wardrobe, for more gay flowers on your hat, on your lapel, at your throat and at your waistline, for gloves that are going in strong for high color, for footwear, too, that is most daringly gay. As flamboyantly colorful a season is this, as wildest flights of imagination e'er might venture to picture.

When the salesperson shows you the newer prints that fairly scream with color, do not be timid, but throw discretion to the winds and indulge to your heart's content in all the Dubonnet reds and the gorgeous tulip shades that are so fashionable and the lovely violet and purple tones and the radiant mimosa hues and the glamorous blues and the stunning greens plus dozens of equally captivating hues such as the color-card of fashion records.

Typical of the present trend is the costume to the right in the illustration. A galaxy of flowers in multi-color is the theme of the lovely triple sheer of bemberg print which fashions it. The colorings are as riotous and entrancing in this triple sheer as ever glorified a midsummer garden scene. You cannot but look your pretty-prettiest self in a flower print like this. Then, too, this costume is eminently practical. It is the sort that has a way of fitting into the picture anywhere and everywhere. With such a dress-plus-jacket ensemble in your wardrobe you will never be haunted with the ever-recurring question of "what to wear." You will know.

The white pique bow and gilet treatment sound a winsome note of freshness. The short pleated sleeves are distinctively chic. The little jacket is double-breasted and belted at the back. These brief perky youthful-type jackets, some of which look like basques, others flaunting animated peplum, are quite the rage. You may, however, if you wish, go to just the extreme opposite and have the coat made of print that tops your print dress, full-length buttoned down the front from neck to hem. Long or short, be sure your print dress has its matching coat, jacket, or cape.

If you are looking for something distinctively new and out of the ordinary in prints, here it is, pictured to the left. White shadow flowers on a dark background such as this is the very latest print news. Fancy, if you will, white shadow-outlined flowers against a rich Dubonnet red, or contrasting a vivid green ground, or gray or black or the color you like best. No happier choice could be made than this cool frock made of triple sheer print of bemberg. It is dark enough to be practical and it is light enough to look and to feel summery and sheer. Marquisette sleeves cut full and shirred at the wrist with appliques of the flower motif cut from the print itself and a very feminine jabot of the marquisette, contribute to the charm of this gown.

We couldn't resist including the cunning flower-trimmed hat in this group. It fits so perfectly into the scheme of things colorful and entrancingly spring-like. It is just such a headpiece as will crown any flower-print dress with glory. The shiny black of its basket-weave straw is contrasted by a spray of gay posies—yellow bachelor's buttons and blue cornflowers. The bow is of silk taffeta in matching cornflower blue.

OF NOVELTY COTTON

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Cottons for swank is the message from fashion headquarters. This gay topcoat is of checkerboard patterned cotton, woven in navy and white. The novelty cotton suitings and coatings shown this season are thrilling. A one-piece frock in white twill is worn under this coat. A printed silk scarf at neck and waist adds tone and gaiety. The hat is white felt embroidered in white angora.

The White Ensemble

One of the loveliest ensembles seen recently was white in every detail—the gown, the ermine wrap, long white gloves, two strands of pearls, diamond bracelets, a diamond hair clip and three pure-white orchids pinned to a narrow shoulder strap.

NAVY BLUE POPULAR COLOR FOR SPRING

Blue—especially navy—is the predominating color in the fashion parade. It is shown in formal and informal costumes from morning to night—in suits, coats, frocks and even pajamas. There's particular emphasis on blue as an important evening fashion. Blue is present in numerous copies of Schiaparelli, Vionnet, Mainbocher, Lanvin, and Molyneux, featuring peplums, yokes, pleats, tunics, and petticoats and squared shoulders. Great stress is laid on jacket dresses, and also bright and contrasting accessories.

Black costumes are next after the navy blues in importance.

New Frocks Are Inspired by Fashions From Orient

The stately robes of the Manchus and the distinctive apparel of the peasants have inspired extremely smart occidental frocks. Printed jacket dresses copy the brilliant coloring and designs of Chinese embroideries and porcelains, and feature graceful mandarin sleeves. The coolie jacket becomes a tunic with the typical standing collar and slit sides, posed over a slim straight skirt. Black paper taffeta makes a delightful dinner dress with a high neckline piped with jade green, short kimono sleeves and a jade green sash. It is worn with black kidskin sandals and a flat beret of black felt faced with green.

For Tailored Suit

The hat of the season for tailored wear is a soft felt, much like a man's fedora, that you can wear day in and day out. Another very popular hat is a small felt beret in black, in pale misty blue, or a queer bright shade.

Color Combination

Perfume green with wine red is a combination featured in a heavy linen beach costume. The green is used for the blouse and the red for skirt and tailored shorts.

HOUSEKEEPING IS NOW PROFESSION

Modern Women Are Using Their Time Intelligently.

By EDITH M. BARBER

VOCATIONS which are open to women were thoroughly discussed at a conference which took place not long ago. College students and recent graduates listened to discussions conducted by leaders in the business and professional world.

While many women today are wage earners, many of them practice at the same time the profession of home-making in which a majority of women are still engaged. Women more and more are taking the matter of managing their households as jobs. They are limiting their own hours intelligently. In this case, work must be organized. A letter from one of these women states, "There must be a number of women like me who yearn to know how to assemble healthy, and yet attractive meals with the least possible bother. I am especially interested in cooking ahead as far as possible. It seems to me much easier to do the strenuous work for dinner early in the morning."

The first step, it seems to me, is to plan the menu for the week. This must necessarily be elastic as food bargains and leftovers must be considered as they appear. The menu plan should usually begin on Sunday, both because Saturday specials are offered and because there are likely to be leftovers which can be put to good use during the next day or two.

Saturday morning, unless there are plans for an out-of-town week end, may well be devoted to the preparation of food which may contribute to meals for several days ahead.

One of the best ways of cutting the time of preparation is to make it a habit to cook enough potatoes for two meals at one time. They may be served baked for one meal and then may be creamed or browned in butter or bacon fat the next day. Many other vegetables will find a use a second day. Leftover spinach, for instance, will supply a foundation for a soup, a souffle or a sauce. The same is true of mushrooms.

If there are plans for a Sunday in the country with return for a late dinner, steak or chops rather than the usual roast or fowl, may be chosen. To serve with this, there may be prepared on Saturday a casserole of macaroni with tomatoes and cheese, or a dish of creamed potatoes all ready to be browned in the oven while the steak is cooking. The prepared vegetable will be cooked at the same time and the salad may be put together.

Chicken Fricassee.

1 fowl, cut into pieces for serving
Butter or chicken fat
Water
2 bay leaves
3 sprigs parsley
3 celery leaves
1 onion, sliced
6 peppercorns
4 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1½ cups chicken stock
½ cup cream
2 egg yolks
Salt, pepper, nutmeg

Brown the chicken in the fat. Add enough water to cover and the seasonings. Cover and cook slowly until chicken is tender. Melt the butter, stir in the flour and when well blended add chicken stock and cream. Stir constantly and boil one minute. Pour a little of this sauce into the slightly beaten egg yolks and then pour back into sauce. Season to taste with salt, pepper and nutmeg and serve this sauce with the chicken.

Bavarian Cream.

2 tablespoons gelatin
¼ cup cold water
2 cups milk
½ cup sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup coconut
1 cup whipped cream
2 teaspoons vanilla

Soak the gelatin in the water. Place the milk, sugar and salt. Beat with a wheel egg beater a few seconds to insure smoothness. Add the gelatin and stir until dissolved. Remove from the fire, stand in cold water, stir occasionally, and when it begins to thicken, fold in the coconut and the whipped cream. Pour into a mold, chill, when set serve with whipped cream or with a custard sauce. Garnish the sauce with cherries.

Inexpensive Sponge Cake.

3 eggs
1 cup sugar
1 cup cake flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
Salt
¼ cup cold water

Break the eggs into a bowl, add the sugar and beat together ten minutes. Add the dry ingredients, which have been sifted together, alternately with the water. Bake in cake pan in slow oven, 325 degrees Fahrenheit, for about one hour.

Modern Furniture

"We have gone modern. Modern is reaching all classes and its adoption into the average home is a welcome change," say prominent designers in the furniture field. It is evident that modern furniture will be more conservative in the use of veneer matchings—many of the standard veneers such as butt walnut and plain stripe are being used with conservative finishes.

Color for Bathroom

An unusual and striking color scheme for a modern bathroom consists of painted dove gray walls with a French gray trim. At the window, a Chinese red Venetian blind strikes a vivid note of color that is echoed in the bath towels and the leather cover of the bench before the black and silver dressing table.

Varnishing Walls

Any painted wall may be varnished over. It is a common practice to varnish fine Tiffany glaze finishes as well as plain walls, for reason of protection.

The Household

●

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THE fabric framed picture pillow cushion cover is a smart novelty. It is just the thing for summertime use for it is charming when developed in glazed chintz. It can be a main cover or a slip cover to protect a handsome cushion. Or it can be a luxurious cover when fashioned of silk brocade with plain satin or velvet for the textile frame.

For the center choose a square of pictorial material. This may be a quaint toile de Jouy, one of the old or modern reproductions of an English scene, or an American landscape. Or it may be a square containing a floral motif of some sort. Any attractive textile of pictorial merit can be used successfully provided the square is of sufficient size to show one full unit. It may have to include fragments of other motifs when these are in close repetition, but this is unimportant. The necessity is to have the square contain enough beauty to warrant its use for our purpose, and large so that the frame is so wide that it will dwarf the picture.

The size of the square cannot be given, as it must depend on the size of the motif to be framed. Also the shape may have to suit the requirements of the picture. That is, the motif may be somewhat wider than its height, or higher than its width, and then a slightly oblong shape would be needed. However, the discrepancies must be slight to insure uniformity of width of frame. The pillow may be slightly shaped to conform to the shape of the picture. Which, by the way, should be woven or printed in colors.

The frame must be of a one-toned material, although it can be of novelty weave, or in self-toned design. Its width is determined by the size of the picture and the cushion on which the cover is to go. A three or four-inch frame is the average. The picture can be centered on the square of material forming the frame, or the frame can be seamed to the edges of the picture.

There is an interesting molding effect secured by having a very narrow, three-quarter or one-inch knife pleating or narrow fringe edging the frame where it meets the picture, and also extending all around the other edge. This fancy molding effect sets an immediate stamp of smartness on the gay novelty framed picture cushion covers.

The words will require 9 seconds for their trip around the world.

G. O. P. Platform: Restore Liberty!

Strikes at Dictatorship of New Deal; Landon's Position Clear.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Almost a complete reassertion of the Constitution of the United States, in the face of three long years of attack upon it by the New Deal, was the platform adopted by the Republican National convention here. To its restatement of the American principles of a national liberty based upon personal liberty was added the vigor of a telegram from Gov. Alfred M. Landon of Kansas, making clear his interpretation of certain important planks as the unanimously selected nominee of the party for the Presidency.

The platform roundly condemned the New Deal for the President's usurpation of the powers of congress; flaunting the Supreme court; violation of citizens' liberties; countenancing dangerous monopoly; passing laws contrary to the Constitution; violation of the Bill of Rights, and repudiating the sacred obligations and traditions of the nation. It deplored federal waste and use of public funds to political ends; unfair investigations; intimidation of industry; coercion of voters; appeals to class prejudice and destruction of public morale.

A summary of the platform follows:

Constitutional Government and Free Enterprise

We pledge ourselves:

1. To maintain the American system of Constitutional and local self government, and to resist all attempts to impair the authority of the Supreme court of the United States, the final protector of the rights of our citizens against the arbitrary encroachments of the legislative and executive branches of government.

2. To preserve the American system of free enterprise, private competition, and equality of opportunity.

Re-Employment.

The only permanent solution of the unemployment problem is the absorption of the unemployed by industry and agriculture. (To this end, the platform advocated abandonment of all New Deal restrictive, competitive and coercive policies—especially those which restrict production.)

Relief.

To end confusion, partisanship, waste and incompetence, we pledge:

1. The return of responsibility for relief administration to non-political local agencies familiar with community problems.

2. Federal grants-in-aid to the states and territories while the need exists, upon compliance with these conditions: (a) a fair proportion of the total relief burden to be provided from the revenues of states and local governments; (b) all engaged in relief administration to be selected on the basis of merit and fitness; (c) adequate provision to be made for the encouragement of those persons who are trying to become self-supporting.

3. Undertaking of federal public works only on their merits and separate from the administration of relief.

4. A prompt determination of the facts concerning relief and unemployment.

Security.

We propose a system of old age security, based upon the following principles:

1. Pay-as-you-go.

2. Every American citizen over sixty-five should receive the supplementary payment necessary to provide a minimum income sufficient to protect him or her from want.

3. Each state and territory, upon complying with simple and general minimum standards, should receive from the federal government a graduated contribution in proportion to its own, up to a fixed maximum.

4. To make this program consistent with sound fiscal policy the federal revenues for this purpose must be provided from the proceeds of a direct tax widely distributed. All will be benefited and all should contribute.

We propose to encourage adoption by the states and territories of honest and practical measures for meeting the problems of unemployment insurance.

Labor.

We pledge ourselves to:

Protect the right of labor to organise and to bargain collectively through representatives of its own choosing without interference from any source.

Prevent governmental job holders from exercising autocratic powers over labor.

Support the adoption of state laws and interstate compacts to abolish sweatshops and child labor, and to protect women and children with respect to maximum hours, minimum wages and working conditions. We believe that this can be done within the Constitution as it now stands.

Agriculture.

Following the wreck of the restrictive and coercive AAA, the New Deal administration has taken to itself the principles of the Republican policy of soil conservation and land retirement. This action opens the way for a non-political and permanent solution. Such a solution cannot be had under a New Deal administration which misuses the program to serve partisan ends, to promote scarcity and to limit by coercive methods the farmer's control over his own farm.

Our paramount object is to protect and foster the family type of farm, traditional in American life, and to promote policies which will bring about an adjustment of agriculture to meet the needs of domestic and foreign markets. As an emergency measure, during the agricultural depression, federal benefit payments or grants-in-aid when administered within the means of the federal government are consistent with a balanced budget.

We propose:

1. To facilitate economical production and increased consumption on a basis of abundance instead of scarcity.

2. A national land-use program, including the acquisition of abandoned and non-productive farm lands by voluntary sale or lease, subject to approval of the legislative and executive branches of the states concerned, and the devotion of such land to appropriate public use.

3. That an agricultural policy be pursued for the protection and restoration of the land resources, designed to bring about such a balance between soil-building and soil-depleting crops as will permanently insure productivity, with reasonable benefits to co-operating farmers on family-type farms, but so regulated as to eliminate the New Deal's destructive policy towards the dairy and live stock industries.

4. To extend experimental aid to farmers developing new crops suited to our soil and climate.

5. To promote the industrial use of farm products by applied science.

6. To protect the American farmer against importation of all live stock, dairy, and agricultural products, substitutes therefor, and derivatives therefrom, which will depress American farm prices.

7. To provide effective quarantine against imported livestock, dairy and other farm products from countries which do not impose health and sanitary regulations fully equal to those required of our own producers.

8. To provide for ample farm credit at rates as low as those enjoyed by other industries, including commodity and livestock loans, and preference in land loans to the farmer acquiring or refinancing a farm as a home.

9. To provide for decentralized, non-partisan control of the Farm Credit administration and the election by national farm loan associations of at least one-half of each board of directors of the federal loan banks, and thereby remove these institutions from politics.

10. To provide in the case of agricultural products of which there are exportable surpluses, the payment of reasonable benefits upon the domestically consumed portion of such crops in order to make the tariff effective. These payments are to be limited to the productive level of the family type farm.

11. To encourage and further develop co-operative marketing.

12. To furnish government assistance in disposing of surpluses in foreign trade by bargaining for foreign markets selectively by countries both as to exports and imports. We strenuously oppose so-called reciprocal treaties which trade off the American farmer.

13. To give every reasonable assistance to producers in areas suffering from temporary disaster, so that they may regain and maintain a self-supporting status.

Tariff.

We would keep on the free list all products not grown or produced in the United States in commercial quantities. As to all commodities that commercially compete with our farms, our forests, our mines, our fisheries, our oil wells, our labor and our industries, sufficient protection should be maintained at all times to defend the American farmer and the American wage earner from the destructive competition emanating from the subsidies of foreign governments and the imports from low-wage and depreciated-currency countries.

We will repeal the present reciprocal trade agreement law.

We will restore the principle of flexible tariff.

We will adjust tariffs with a view to promoting international trade, the stabilization of currencies, and the attainment of a proper balance between agriculture and industry.

We condemn the secret negotiation of reciprocal trade treaties without public hearing or legislative approval.

Monopolies.

We favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal laws, as well as the civil laws, against monopolies and trusts and their officials, and we demand the enactment of such additional legislation as is necessary to make it impossible for private monopoly to exist in the United States.

Regulation of Business.

We recognize the existence of a field within which governmental regulation is desirable and salutary. The authority to regulate should be vested in an independent tribunal acting under clear and specific laws establishing definite standards. Their determinations on law and facts should be subject to review by the courts. We favor federal regulation, within the Constitution, of the marketing of securities to protect investors. We favor also federal regulation of the interstate activities of public utilities.

Civil Service.

We pledge ourselves to the merit system, virtually destroyed by New Deal spoilsmen. It should be restored, improved and extended.

Government Finance.

We pledge ourselves to:

Stop the folly of uncontrolled spending.

Balance the budget—not by increasing taxes but by cutting expenditures, drastically and immediately.

Revise the federal tax system and co-ordinate it with state and local tax systems.

Use the taxing power for raising revenue and not for punitive or political purposes.

Money and Banking.

We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards. The first requisite to a sound and stable currency is a balanced budget. We oppose further devaluation of the dollar. We will restore to the congress the authority lodged with it by the Constitution to coin money and regulate the value thereof by repealing all the laws delegating this authority to the Executive.

National Defense

We favor an army and navy, including air forces, adequate for our National Defense.

We will co-operate with other nations in the limitation of armaments and control of traffic in arms.

Bill of Rights.

We pledge ourselves to preserve, protect and defend, against all intimidation and threat, freedom of religion, speech, press and radio; and the right of assembly and petition and immunity from unreasonable searches and seizures.

We offer the abiding security of a government of laws as against the autocratic perils of a government of men.

Furthermore.

1. We favor the construction by the federal government of head-water storage basins to prevent floods, subject to the approval of the legislative and executive branches of the government of the states whose lands are concerned.

2. We favor equal opportunity for our colored citizens. We pledge our protection of their economic status and personal safety. We will do our best to further their employment in the gainfully occupied life of America, particularly in private industry, agriculture, emergency agencies and the civil service.

3. To our Indian population we pledge every effort on the part of the national government to ameliorate living conditions for them.

4. We pledge continuation of the Republican policy of adequate compensation and care for veterans disabled in the service of our country and for their widows, orphans and dependents.

5. We shall use every effort to collect the war debt due us from foreign countries amounting to $12,000,000,000—one-third of our national debt.

6. We are opposed to legislation which discriminates against women in federal and state employment.

Conclusion.

We assume the obligations and duties imposed upon Government by modern conditions. We affirm our unalterable conviction that, in the future as in the past, the fate of the nation will depend, not so much on the wisdom and power of government, as on the character and virtue, self-reliance, industry and thrift of the people and on their willingness to meet the responsibilities essential to the preservation of a free society.

In conclusion, the platform emphasized the fact that the great national crisis and the issues involved transcended party lines, and called for a united front, regardless of party.

LANDON'S TELEGRAM

Cleveland, Ohio. — Clarifying beyond a doubt his interpretation of the platform of the Republican party in the coming election, Governor Landon, the nominee, with the forthrightness and honesty which has characterized his participation in public affairs, dispatched the following telegram (in part) to the Republican National convention before his nomination:

"Under the title of labor the platform commits the Republican party as follows: 'Support the adoption of state laws and interstate compacts to abolish sweat shops and child labor, and to protect women and children with respect to maximum hours, minimum wages, and working conditions. We believe that this can be done within the Constitution as it now stands.'

"I hope the opinion of the convention is correct, that the aims which you have in mind may be attained within the Constitution as it now stands. But if that opinion should prove to be erroneous, I want you to know that, if nominated and elected, I shall favor a Constitutional amendment permitting the states to adopt such legislation as may be necessary adequately to protect women and children in the matter of maximum hours, minimum wages, and working conditions. This obligation we cannot escape.

"The convention advocates 'a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards.' I agree that 'the first requisite to a sound and stable currency is a balanced budget.' The second requisite, as I view it, is a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold.

"I recognize, however, that the second requisite must not be made effective until and unless it can be done without penalizing our domestic economy and without injury to our producers of agricultural products and other raw materials.

"The convention pledges the party to the merit system and to its restoration, improvement and extension.

"In carrying out this pledge I believe that there should be included within the merit system every position in the administrative service below the rank of assistant secretaries of major departments and agencies, and that this inclusion should cover the entire postoffice department.

"ALFRED M. LANDON."

Spencerville Man Badly Beaten

Chas. High, 78, Attacked in His Yard by Two Ohio Boys, Beaten, Dragged to Front Yard, was Rushed to Souders Hospital and Today Recovery is Not Completely Assured.

Charles High, 78, of Spencerville, is a patient at the Dr. Bonnell Souder hospital in Auburn, suffering from a fractured jaw and many bruises and cuts about his face and body as the result of a vicious attack made upon him Saturday night. It is believed he will recover.

His alleged assailants, Farrell Wonderly, 19, of Bryan, O., and Paul Coy, 21, of Farmer, O., were placed in the DeKalb county jail.

Mr. High had become irritated it is said, because men who visited a beer parlor near his home at night were creating a nuisance in his back yard. He decided to discourage them and, while sitting in a chair, he squirted water on the intruders with a squirt gun.

The aged man gave this kind of a reception to Wonderly and Coy and they are alleged to have attacked him. It is believed they hit him with their fists and also used some kind of weapon, possibly the squirt gun. Their blows resulted in Mr. High's jaw being broken and one eye being closed. The upper part of his body was rendered black and blue from the blows.

The indications are that the assailants intended to drag their victim into the street in front of his house in the expectation that it would be believed he was struck by an automobile, but they got only as far as his sidewalk, where they abondoned him. He was found there a little later and Dr. B. O. Shook was called. The youths were rounded up by Deputy Sheriff Beeks Erick, who lives in the town and he and Joseph Koch, of Grabill, took them to the county jail. Mr. High was removed to the hospital in Auburn by Mark A. Nelson of the state police, who reached Spencerville after the affair had taken place.

High was formerly a farmer and afterward operated a restaurant in Spencerville. His wife is dead. He has been quite feeble because of his age.

When the young men were rounded up and placed under arrest, the citizens became very indignant that such a disturbance should be caused. Men of high standing in the community expressed themselves very definitely as to the continuance of such things in their community that would tend to draw undesirables, as has been the case for the past months.

Reports are that the public dance hall will no longer operate in Spenceville, to which has been given credit for having caused much unrest on the part of the Spencerville citizens.

Enter Not Guilty Plea

Farrell Wonderly, of Bryan, O., and Paul Cox, of Farmer, O., entered pleas of not guilty when they were arraigned in the DeKalb circuit court Tuesday on a charge of assault and battery.

Bond was fixed at $500 in each case and the defendants were remanded to jail.

The time of trial of the youths may depend upon the progress made by Chas. High, 78, of Spencerville, in combatting the effects of injuries he received Saturday night. The defendants are accused of having attacked him and he is a patient at the Dr. Bonnell Souder hospital in Auburn. His condition Tuesday was reported as fair, but it is too early to determine if he will recover.

Capt. H. C. Springer was retained as councel for the youths. He consulted with them in the county jail prior to their arraignment before Judge Endicott.

The defendants are said to have become incensed at the aged man when he squirted water upon them as they entered his back yard and were creating what he considered a nuisance. Apparently he was struck with fists and with the squirt gun that he had been using. He was then dragged to the sidewalk in front of his home and abandoned.

SHEEP KILLING DOGS GET IN THEIR WORK

Last spring an epidemic of sheep killing dogs swept the county and again another outbreak is reported in this community during the past two weeks.

The following farmers have lost sheep of late: Orange Herrick, 4; George Walter, 4; Roy Keller, 7; Stanley Means, 1; Lamont J. Likes, 10 killed and 8 injured badly, and 3 missing; Frank Johnson, 13.

The farmers have launched a drive to kill all dogs found on their farms and already 4 have been killed. The last one was part bull dog, with white breast and white stripe in face. Inquiry has been made for its owner, but no one seems to know. It evidently traveled for many miles from home.

The township funds for payment of sheep killed has long been exhausted, and the farmers will have to wait for their incoming dog taxes, before they can be reimbursed for their loss by the township trustee.

MANY PENSIONSERS FAIL TO MAKE APPLICATION

Unless twenty eight old-age pensioners on the county commissioners' list file new applications by Friday, June 26, they will n receive their monthly checks Ju 1, Miss Nora Brown, director of the county welfare board, poin ed out Saturday.

Under the new law, every person already receiving a pen must make out a new applicati and if he fails to do so the pe sion is cut off. Miss Brown se letters to all of the pensioners the list May 26 and told them th should file new applications wit in thirty days. Two hundred an fourteen have done so, but 2 have failed so far.

Miss Brown has received new applications, but none these will receive pensions in Ju and possibly not for some tim thereafter. Miss Brown and h aides are devoting their enti time to the investigation and con sideration of the present pe sioners. So far, about forty ha been investigated, but the wor on only a small portion of thes has been completed.

Uncle Phil Says:

Work First, Then Play

Play is an important part in the program of life, but work must be done before we can afford to play.

Somehow or other it seems so much easier to profit by the mistakes of others than by our own.

It is not a few faint wishes, but a lifelong struggle, that makes us valiant.

It isn't necessary to be forward to make progress.

Since there are so many mistakes to make, what's the use of making the same one twice?

Reliability First

The worst thing that can happen to a man is to lose his reputation for reliability. Nothing can square him.

You never can tell. Reform sometimes gets no farther than stirring up the mud.

The man who tries to achieve something and fails is infinitely greater than the man who tries to do nothing and succeeds.

If a man is right he doesn't have to get mad about it.

Indiscretion causes about as much mortification as sin.

Blemishes Made Her Old Looking

Face Clear Again with Cuticura Soap and Ointment

Here is a letter every skin sufferer should read. Its message is vital. "There were blemishes on my face, of external origin, and they made me look old and haggard. They were red, hard and large. They would hurt, and when I scratched them the skin would become irritated, and I would lie awake at night and start digging at my face.

"But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one tin of Cuticura Ointment my face was cleared again." (Signed) Mrs. L. Whetzler, 2nd St., Floreffe, Pa., June 15, 1935.

Physicians can understand such letters. The Cuticura formulas have proved their effectiveness for over half a century. Remember, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are also for pimples, rashes, ringworm, burning of eczema and other externally caused skin blemishes. All druggists. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c.—Adv.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

Do you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

The Trolling Frog Tragedy

BECAUSE he's so desperately fond of frog's legs, Albert Mackey of Detroit once owned the biggest bull frog that ever croaked a love song.

Albert landed the Goliath near Grass Lake Mich., and it measured 28¾ inches and weighed precisely three pounds, four ounces.

Albert kept the giant alive simply because it spurred his appetite just to look at his pet. He named it Frenchy.

When Albert owned Frenchy 28 days to the hour he permitted the frog a daily swim in the lake. When he gave a certain peculiar whistle, here the frog would come, plowing the water like a destroyer.

An adventurously hungry fish followed Frenchy home from his swim one day, nipping at his aft propellers and spurring Al's pet leviathan to strenuous efforts. That gave Al an idea and it wasn't long until a little harness was fitted on the frog's body. Then Al attached two short lengths of fishing line and a couple of good-sized hooks with spinners and sent Frenchy out trolling.

The very first trial, a two-pound bass struck. Al whistled and Frenchy, churning the water desperately, beached his prize. It was easy then. Frenchy learned to troll the most likely places, edges of weed beds, around lily pads and windfalls—he'd even dive into deep holes where bass lurked.

Course, nothing's permanent. Unknown to all, a fierce muskellunge inhabited Grass lake. Al had sent Frenchy foraging when he saw the muskie dive at the frog, gulp mightily and vanish with him, not to reappear.

"I'd a-whistled him home," said Albert sadly. "But we'd put some persimmons on ice and I was testing them. Darn it all, my lips puckered on me."

And it's well known in Detroit that out of respect for his frog, Albert Mackey hasn't eaten another persimmon since that dreadful day.

Saved by a Sonnet

"GRANDPAP MORGAN was a frontier publisher in Texas, but he had his most thrilling adventure before he ever reached the Lone Star state," says Frank Morgan, printer and proofreader in many a shop throughout the Middle West. This is his story of that adventure:

The wagon train which Grandpap Morgan had joined with his old Army press, his cases of type and other equipment, got safely through the Indian country until it came to the crossing of the Cimarron river. There a big war party jumped them.

For more than three hours the emigrants kept the redskins at bay. Then a whisper of fear ran among the defenders . . . their bullets were almost exhausted! As their fire slackened and died down, the savages began massing for a final charge.

Just as the emigrants were getting ready to throw down their useless rifles and draw their Bowie knives, Grandpap Morgan shouted: "Wait! Wait! . . . Quick, one of you fellers . . . help me get the type locked up in this form . . . it's all ready to print when I get to Texas, but it won't get printed anyway if the Injuns kill me now. Here, men, fill your guns!"

As they rammed home the pieces of lead type, a ringing war-whoop and the drumming of swift pony hoofs on the hard prairie told of the savage charge that was coming

"Now!" shouted Grandpap Morgan. A blast of fire from fifty rifles, and the racing ponies were jerked to a halt. A moment later the redskins, screeching with rage, were racing away in mad retreat over the hills.

Grandpap Morgan grinned. "I knew that would turn the trick," he said. "A column and a half of spring poetry . . . they just couldn't stand it!"

Ever Meet a High-Behind?

MANY a tenderfoot has protected the camp from a high-behind, but not one of them has seen this fabulous beast.

The high-behind, as all Westerners know, is equipped with a stiff tail, the end of which was fashioned like a posthole digger.

The chief delight of the high-behind was to turn on its back, balance on the tail and spin madly in circles. Of course you understand the rotary action of this indulgence bored a hole in the ground into which the high-behind invariably disappeared.

Night duties of a tenderfoot frequently included replenishment of condensed milk cans around the camp. This was the favorite food of the high-behind. The beast opened the cans with his metal tail and after three drinks was lulled into such abiding peace that the camp was safe for the night from his attacks.

Forest Air Pure

Forest air is pure because the leaves of the trees act as a filter, catching most of the dust and bacteria that would otherwise pollute it. Moreover, a forest has a definite hygienic influence on the land around it, a fact that has been confirmed by a number of villages in India which have never been attacked during cholera epidemics in their district due to their being surrounded by dense, protecting woods. —Collier's.

MEAT A REMEDY FOR HEADACHES

Well Rounded Diet Prevents Head Troubles.

By EDITH M. BARBER

MEAT is a remedy for headaches! That's the latest announcement. Of course, not meat by itself, but a larger amount than usual in the daily diet, with a corresponding decrease in starches and sugars. Many bodily disturbances, which are given various names, are now treated by change in diet rather than by drugs. The high meat diet has been found effective in certain cases of epilepsy. On the other hand in some cases of nephritis, which is caused by an affection of the kidneys, the amount of meat is limited. In diabetes, meat and other proteins are comparatively high, even when insulin allows a moderate amount of starches and sugars.

For the general diet the total amount of protein food usually advised is enough to provide about 10 per cent of the calories needed for the day. This gives a liberal amount to replace tissue which is worn out by use of the muscles. While the larger amount under ordinary conditions is not harmful, an oversupply may crowd out fruits and vegetables which supply important minerals and vitamins.

Because protein foods are generally expensive, it is economical to use sugars, starches and fats to supply the energy material which is needed for the work of the body machine in keeping it running and for the extra calories, the need for which depends upon the occupation.

With a well-rounded diet, headaches will usually be unknown unless there is some special disturbance which makes them chronic. In this case, the doctor may advise the high meat content mentioned above.

Liver With Cream Sauce.

Slice the liver one-third inch thick. Scale and strip off the skin on edges. Drain and cook quickly with two sliced onions in three tablespoons of butter. Pour in sweet or sour cream to cover, and let simmer ten minutes, closely covered. Add salt and pepper to taste.

Hungarian Goulash.

2 onions, minced
¼ cup butter or drippings

1 green pepper, chopped
6 sprigs parsley, minced
1 cup stewed tomatoes
Hot water
4 potatoes, raw-peeled and diced
Salt and paprika

To Brighten Windows

A spoonful of kerosene added to a pail of very hot water will make windows, mirrors and picture glasses bright and clear. In washing windows use a small clean cloth, wring it dry and rub it over the glass, after wiping down the framework with an oiled cloth. Do the same with the next window on both sides. After that go back to the first one and wipe it dry with a large, clean cloth. No real polishing is required.

Smooths Garden Furniture

Hickory garden furniture—the sort with the bark still on it—should be coated with spar varnish to make it just as smooth as possible. In this way you can minimize the danger of snagging sheer hose and filmy fabrics.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

MILLE fleur guest towels and finger towels are the last word in these linen closet furnishings, which have become a modern household necessity. The words mille fleur are used as a term of description rather than one of precision, since the flowers cannot be reckoned in millions. However, the random sprinkling of the flowers over the entire surface of the towels is in accord with the term as applied in other decorative uses.

The number of blossoms embroidered on a towel is at the discretion of the person working them. The flowers must be distributed over the towel and not be arranged as a border or in any set fashion. We may consider the surface of the towel as a green lawn with the flowers springing up here and there through the grass, the bright colors making the sward gay.

Stitches.

Lazy daisy stitch is popular for the embroidery although outline stitch is equally good. The advantage of daisy stitch is that with two stitches a complete petal is worked, with both edges laid in the embroidery medium. Daisy is a modified buttonhole stitch, which can be worked so rapidly that even a lazy worker can accomplish much with it in a short time.

For a flower, start each lop stitch in center of flower, bringing point of needle up and over the thread where the tip of the petal should come. Put the needle down to bring embroidery medium over the petal strand and hold it in place, and at the same time bring the needle up where the next stitch is to start. All stitches are similarly made. Stems, if any, are outlined. When well worked, both lazy daisy and outline stitches are good looking on the wrong side. Also they are flat, and essential for mille fleur towel ornamentation. Flowers worked in outline may have petals filled with darning stitches.

Colors and Materials.

Flowers may all be in the same color, or colors may vary in different blossoms. Stems, if any, should be green. Huckaback, damask, linen, heavy or in handkerchief weight (this last for finger towels only) are recommended materials. Embroidery medium should not be too fine. Fabric and medium should be in contrast.

Second Hand Diamond

By LIDA WOLFE

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

LOU was a grand person to have in a crowd. Even we girls liked her, though she usually stole the show from the rest of us. As for the boys, they never seemed to know anything was going on unless Lou was in the midst of it. But none of us ever thought of being jealous of her.

Four of us were in the drug store one day when Lou came sauntering in.

"I have something to tell you," she said. Her eyes were shining and dreamy. Suddenly she slipped off the white-knitted glove on her left hand and spread her fingers on the table. We all gasped.

Diamonds were not so plentiful in our experience and the modest stone we saw impressed us mightily.

"Monty?" we cried almost in chorus.

Lou nodded and lifted her hand to look at the ring. "I'm going to give it back to him tonight, but I wanted you girls to see it first."

"Give it back? Isn't it big enough, or what?"

"Oh, it might do, though I'd really like to have a nicer one. But Monty wants to get married and settle down. You know what that would mean. No more clubs, no more dances, no more fun. A nice hot supper promptly at six, then a big chair and a book for him, and a bag of knittin' for poor little Louise. I can't see it—"

Neither could we. Monty was the best in the world, clean and honest, a square shooter, good looking, and holding down a good job. He had been dangling around after Lou for two years, but we were well aware Lou didn't know, and didn't want to know a thing in the world about housework.

The next time we saw Lou, she wore her mother's little old garnet again, and we knew that was that!

About this time, Smith and Ellis bought the old Mackay store. Anne Mackay had been one of us, and we hated to see her go away. But Cynthia Smith soon slipped into her place and it wasn't long before we learned to like her a lot. Cynthia and Lou seemed to hit it off all right, too, which surprised us.

Lou was blond and blue-eyed, the helpless kind—if you didn't know that she was perfectly capable of helping herself to anything she wanted. Cynthia was small and dark, quick and capable, and just as good-humored as Lou.

It was probably Cynthia's liking for books which first attracted Monty. He loved to read, and so did she; and in a little while they took to going off together with some dry-looking old book. And they would read and argue, and argue and read.

We imagined for a while that Louise did not exactly like being supplanted. She would shrug her shoulders and dance harder than ever with Dan, or Otto, or anyone who happened to be around.

It finally seemed to be more Otto than anybody else. Otto was a good sport, and a fine boy; and he didn't know any more about work than Lou did. But he and Lou seemed to suit each other, somehow, so we couldn't help approving. We did watch Monty, to see how he was taking it; but about that time he and Cynthia were practically shut off from the world.

Late in July, Lou showed us her new ring. It was a diamond, too, of course.

"Thanks a lot for letting us see it," we said, after she had let us pass it around. "Are you giving it back tonight, or will you keep it until tomorrow?"

Lou's face turned rosy, and she slipped it back on her finger. "Neither. This ring stays right where it is. Isn't it a beauty?" She turned her hand in the light. "So much nicer than the one Monty gave me, don't you think?"

"You don't mean that," we told her, "but since you think you do, let's celebrate."

Lou protested that she did mean it, that she was at last deeply in love, that Otto was her great ideal.

A party is a party, and we decided to make this one to Lou the biggest thing the town had ever seen.

Everyone was there, Cynthia and Monty with the rest. It was then that we discovered Cynthia's new ring. Lou saw us gathering about her, and came over to see what it was all about.

Cynthia held out her left hand, blushing and looking very happy. Lou looked at the ring, then at us. Her eyes were wide and looked as innocent as a baby's, but what she said was:

"Why, that's the same little ring Monty tried to give to me!"

Cynthia started as if some one had slapped her. It didn't seem a bit like Lou to say a thing as catty as that, but there it was!

Before anyone could speak, Monty walked up back of Cynthia and looked at us all.

"What's the matter over here?" he asked.

Cynthia turned to him with a hurt look.

"Lou says this is—that she wouldn't take this ring from you, Monty. Is that true?" Then her voice turned bitter and resentful. "Would you really offer me a second-hand diamond?"

She started to slip the ring off, but Monty caught her fingers and closed them over it. Then he reached over and lifted Lou's hand.

"No, honey; here's the second-hand ring. I didn't have any use for it, so I sold it to Otto."

NEW KITCHEN STOVE MAKES ITS OWN GAS

Housewives Marvel at Coleman Range That Lights Instantly Like City Gas—Cooks a Meal with 2c Worth of Fuel

A new kitchen range that offers every cooking convenience of the finest city gas range is now available to housewives, wherever they live.

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, brings to a lifetime of inventive genius his crowning achievement in this amazing new Coleman Safety Range. This new stove makes its own gas from ordinary, lead-free gasoline. A patented method of carburization converts liquid fuel into gas, much the same as in present day automobile engines.

The Coleman Range lights instantly, like city gas. Its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners, another of Mr. Coleman's outstanding developments, produce a clean, clear-blue flame, so hot that a low flame does all ordinary cooking. Tests show an average family meal for five takes about 2c worth of fuel.

Coleman Ranges are finished in gleaming porcelain enamel. Their pleasing colors combine outstanding beauty with unequalled performance.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful new Coleman Ranges will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by simply addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-236, Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

SYNOPSIS

Bryn (James Brynildson III), a tall bronzed young man of wealth, and his chum, Tubby Forbes, are discussing Bryn's coming marriage. Tubby believes it a scheme to get Bryn's wealth from him. Should the girl, Deborah, whom Bryn had met at the office of his attorney, Ted Holworthy, marry Stuart Graham before her twenty-first birthday, she will inherit a vast fortune from her grandfather. Stuart had greatly displeased Deborah, who refuses to marry him. Bryn, posing as an unemployed engineer, offers to marry Deborah, as Stuart, for $50,000, they not to live as man and wife. Twenty-three years previous, Anne Larned had eloped with an adventurer on the day set for her wedding to Courtney Graham. Two days after the birth of her daughter, Anne died. Shortly after, the father died. The Larneds, grandparents, took the child with them to Oregon where, without child companions, Deborah grew up. To safeguard her from some fortune hunter, her grandfather had arranged for her to marry Stuart, son of Courtney Graham, when of age, believing the alliance would be a happy one. When Deborah was fifteen, her grandfather died. Securities had been set aside to keep the family, but a market crash left scarcely enough for them to live on. This was unknown to Deborah's grandmother, an invalid, Gary, a servant, managing the finances. At twenty, the thought of marriage greatly frightens Deborah. It had been planned that Deborah meet Stuart in Frisco, where they were to be married. Tubby and Bryn await Deborah in a hotel in Frisco. Over a period of one year the groom is to prove he is no fortune hunter and can make Deborah happy to the satisfaction of her grandmother. Otherwise the fortune is to go to charity. The will is somewhat ambiguous as to whom Deborah is to marry. The girl arrives with Holworthy. Tubby is surprised to find her charming and sweet. The wedding over, the couple arrives at the home of Deborah's grandmother. The grandmother and Bryn, who she believes to be Stuart, take to one another, which somewhat displeases Deborah, who foresees difficulty when they are to separate after a year. Deborah remonstrates with Bryn for his familiarity and insincerity. Bryn declares he is sincere. Deborah believes Bryn has a sweetheart waiting for him.

"Marketing list?" Gary repeated, with utter horror. He stared at the paper as if it were a message of destruction from Mars.

"Five dozen wax tapers, of the best quality," Gary read out. "A cook and three housemaids."

Gary groaned.

"Copies of all the modern magazines, particularly those relating to ladies' fashions and the new methods of entertaining."

Deborah swallowed.

"A plumber to inspect all the plumbing of the house. A man to put the electric plant in order."

"A catalogue of comfortable motor cars."

"Four or five gardeners."

"A man who understands horses, knows where they may be obtained, and can care for them."

Bryn looked up with amused eyes. "You're evidently going to be taught to ride, Deborah." His eyes went again to the list.

"Ten pounds of the best Jasmine tea."

"Eight dollars a pound," Gary breathed. "That's her special blend."

"A cow, or sufficient cows to give plenty of rich cream."

"Well," Bryn said after a moment, "it's a fairly good beginning. I don't suppose she's heard of electric refrigerators, or vacuum cleaners, or radios, or any number of other modern inventions. The magazines will undoubtedly help, unless we go over them first and cut out all the advertisements."

Deborah sprang up. "Oh, what's the use of all this?" she cried. "I won't have you laughing at her. It's no use making fun. She thinks . . . she thinks we can manage anything now. She doesn't know. However am I going to tell her? What am I going to do?"

Gary turned away and began to walk up and down the floor, desperate. Deborah ran to the door and stood gazing out over the lovely peace and quiet of the June morning.

"It's all we can do to pay the taxes," Gary said at last.

There was a silence.

Deborah came back to the table. "I'll have to pretend I'm ill," she said. "I'll have to say I've a pain in my heart, or something like that. Something that can't stand excitement. That's the only thing."

Gary stared at her. But it was Bryn who objected. "You might as well tell her the truth," he said, "because specialists come high. We wouldn't be any better off."

"Let's tell her the truth," Gary said sharply. "Let's tell her, Miss Deborah. We're getting in too deep."

Bryn rose and said, "the way out has just occurred to me. Mr. Holworthy."

Deborah caught her breath. "What could he do?"

"He knows the circumstances. He could advance us the money we need."

"But will he?"

"We can try. I think he will. In the meantime, we can buy the smaller things. . . . I have a little money of my own, a few hundreds. I am happy to put them at our mutual disposal. And when we go into town, Deborah, we can mail a letter to Mr. Holworthy."

"We can't take your money."

"Nonsense. Of course you can take my money. You can give me a note, if you like, and pay me interest. I can't possibly use it myself up here, can I? So it's settled."

Gary drew a deep breath of relief. "I'd thought of borrowing before," he said. "But until Miss Deborah was married, we didn't have any prospects of paying it back. Now it's all right. I can see it's all right. If you don't mind lending what you have, sir."

"I don't like borrowing," Deborah continued to protest, her cheeks flaming. "We're taking enough from you. We can't take any more."

Gary turned toward her. "If we don't go through with it, if you tell your grandmother now, then this gentleman won't get his money at the end of the year. You know what your grandmother will do. You know how terrified she is of fortune hunters. She can't keep a little bit of the money for you, and she'd be afraid to keep it all. She wouldn't recognize this marriage. It's too late to marry anybody else; your birthday is past. If we told your grandmother the whole truth, that your . . . the man you've married is a stranger, paid to marry you, she would die. It would kill her. And then, maybe you could get the money, but it would kill your grandmother."

Deborah listened, her eyes dark and smouldering. She lifted them at last to Bryn. "So it's just as a safeguard for yourself that you're offering your money?" she asked icily.

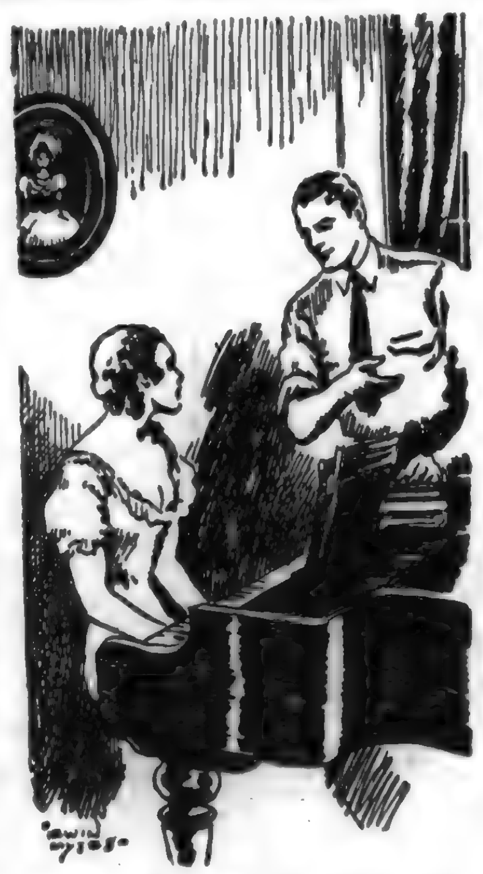
"Something of the sort," Bryn said with truth.

CHAPTER IV

Bryn went upstairs to the south wing where his own room lay. He entered, sat down at the small writing table before the window, lifted the leather case from the floor beside him, unlocked it, took out writing paper, and began a letter to Tubby. After the usual jocular greetings Bryn asked him to procure ten pounds of jasmine tea from an old Chinese friend of theirs, a cook from an employment agency, three housemaids and a butler.

With the letter sealed in his pocket, Bryn went down the stairs in search of Deborah. He heard from the front of the house the sound of the piano. He went slowly toward the drawing room, listening. The piano was being banged with fury. Either Deborah or Grandmother was playing the "Norwegian Bridal Procession" in such a way that it sounded like the march on Paris.

He knocked lightly on the drawing room door, but the piano did not stop. He opened the door and went in. Deborah was pouncing angrily on handfuls of keys and making them wince in pain. Bryn stood for a moment watching her. He was restraining an impulse to walk forward, slip his arms underneath her, lift her from the stool and hold her firmly against him while she kicked and stormed and raged at him, while he looked down into her dark eyes, smiling, waiting for her anger to subside. There would be a moment then when she would lie, limp and beaten, in his arms; and then, with her face at his shoulder and her hair shaken loose over his arm, he could . . .



"But I Am Going to Town, and I Wondered If You'd Care to Go."

The music stopped abruptly, in the middle of a bar. Her hands dropped to her lap, and she stared at him, mute and angry.

"Sorry to interrupt," Bryn said; "the music was beautiful. Such expression. But I'm going in to town, and I wondered if you'd care to go."

"No."

"It's a long drive alone," Bryn said plaintively.

"I'm sorry." She got up from the piano stool with a swish of starched skirt. "You may add something extra to your bill for the trip," she said coldly, and turned and went from the room without a backward glance.

He went upstairs again and knocked on Grandmother's door. She opened it promptly.

"I have to go to town in the car," Bryn told her. "Would you care to put on your bonnet and come? We could be back by dinner time."

Her eyes opened wide. "Go to Lynndale? I? In the car?"

"The road is pretty rough, but I'll drive carefully. Come on, Grandmother, let's go on a bust."

"Why . . . I don't know." Her hands fluttered helplessly. "I haven't been away from here for many years."

"You'll be comfortable. Really," promised Bryn.

She lifted her chin. She drew a deep breath. "Very well," she said at last.

"Come exactly as you are, Grandmother. I'll give you five minutes, and not another second. Five minutes."

LICE, MITE, FLEA, ENEMIES OF HENS

Some Pests Can Live Years Without Food.

By Prof. Glenn W. Herrick, New York State College of Agriculture.
WNU Service.

The hen that supplies the nation's daily breakfast food does her job well, even though many enemies war against her. At least nine different species of lice, several species of mites, and at least two species of fleas attack the hen.

Some enemies of the hen, like the common poultry mite, are so small that they would run about thirty to an inch. Some live on bits of feathers and scales of the skin; others are bloodsuckers. Some cannot live for more than a few days away from the hen; yet the fowl tick has been known to live without food for three years at a time.

Fowls are often affected with a disease known as scaly leg or scabby leg, caused by a very small mite scarcely visible to the unaided eye. The bird eventually becomes lame. Fowls sometimes develop the habit of pulling out their own feathers, even those from others. Most often this habit is due to a tiny itch mite which lives at the base of a feather.

In contrast with lice, the common poultry mite is not a permanent resident on the hen. It might be described as the chicken bedbug, for it attacks the fowls at night and leaves in the morning to hide in cracks and crevices of perches. During the night the mites swarm over the fowls, gorge themselves with food, irritate the hens, and cause them to lose rest and sleep.

Poultrymen have learned to combat these enemies of the hen through chemical and other means.

Double Yard Plan Helps to Check Contamination

Ground on which poultry has run for several years may become "chicken sick," according to H. H. Alp, poultry extension specialist, University of Illinois. The greatest contamination usually exists in the ground nearest the poultry house, particularly when the flock is large.

Now is a good time to plow up the yards and prepare for an abundance of green feed for the flock. A two-yard system is recommended where the flock is large enough to warrant this additional trouble. Double yarding helps to prevent serious permanent soil contamination and also provides a means of having green feed available over a longer period. Crops commonly used in poultry yards are wheat, rye, oats and rape. Wheat and rye are best used early in the spring. Oats and rape are more suitable for summer cropping. Swiss chard makes an excellent summer crop to be fed to birds confined to houses and yards, according to Alp. Laying birds should not be allowed to eat any large quantity of rape, as it has a tendency to darken the color of the egg yolk.

Feeding Skimmilk

Liquid skimmilk should preferably be fed to the flock from earthenware, tin, aluminum or graniteware fountains and dishes. As a rule the milk combines with the zinc in galvanized ware and forms zinc lactate, sometimes bad for chicks and ruinous to the container itself. If necessary to use such containers, fill the galvanized dish with milk and set it away in a warm place for a day or so, then throw away the milk and scrub the dish. This removes most of the undesirable soluble material and the dish will be safer for use in feeding.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Poultry Hints

Eggs should be handled as carefully and skillfully as meat or butter.

* * *

Hen houses open to the air and sun, dry and well ventilated, are easy to keep clean.

* * *

Cleanliness is the keynote in profitable poultry keeping, and is also the best aid in checking the inroads of parasites.

* * *

The quality of an egg does not always depend upon the egg's age.

* * *

Green feeds commonly used for farm flocks include beets, cabbage, carrots and sprouted grains.

* * *

It requires 48 eggs to make a pound of dried yolk, and 15 dozen eggs to produce a pound of dried albumen.

* * *

Farm chicks should grow evenly and rapidly, and turn foodstuffs economically into saleable flesh and eggs.

* * *

Corn or sunflowers will provide August shade for the poultry flock.

* * *

Hens which show excessive yellow pigment should be culled in late summer.

* * *

The future of a flock depends a great deal on the proper handling and feeding of breeding birds.

* * *

Four to six weeks after hatching begin to feed the grain mixture to chicks in hoppers, and keep it constantly before them.

All Around the House

Goldenrod when cultivated makes a beautiful garden flower. It blooms from late July to October.

* * *

When making jam, if fruit is boiled for about ten minutes before sugar is added, less sugar will be used.

* * *

Mushrooms added to brown gravy served with a roast give it a delicious flavor.

* * *

Those little tile tables which are such a help in summer entertaining are now so reasonably priced that you can easily indulge in two or more. Those made of tiles are especially nice.

* * *

Try this method of watering hybrid tea roses all during the summer. With a can opener remove both ends from a tin can, then sink can, one open end down, into the ground. Turn hose into cans and occasionally liquid manure.

* * *

Dry the outside of ice trays after filling with water and before putting back into a mechanical refrigerator. If this is done trays will not stick and may be easily removed.

Coral beads may be cleaned by dissolving a teaspoonful of borax in a pint of warm water. Dip the coral, and when clean, put through tepid water.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 2, 1936 NUMBER 27

CROWDS ARE GROWING ON SATURDAY NIGHTS

Last Saturday night seemed to be the banner attendance in St. Joe, since the inauguratoin of the free talking moving pictures, and with this steady increase in attendance, comes the problem of providing more and adequate seating plans. With Saturday night's crowd, where autos are barred within a close proximity, practically as many people were seated on the grass and milling about, and as many not remaining for the pictures as were seated.

Should the pictures continue indefinitely it will be necessary for the town to provide more seating capacity, in order to expect the people to return for the next show, and the merchants have a right to demand this, as they provide the expense of the pictures. We hope that our City Fathers will take care of the situation soon.

For next Saturday night the pictures are said to be extra good. A ten minute reel, travelouge thru Euope by Will Rogers. Two reels of Harry Landon in "Leatherneckers" and a seven reel picture entitled "Crusader," featuring Ned Sparks, the frozen face comedian, as reporer, entering politics.

Along with the Fourth of July celebration, the pictures will follow the amateur contest. To date seven entries have been made to compete and by Saturday that number ought to be more than double.

Be on hand Saturday afternoon and night and enjoy a real home coming with friends.

He referred apparently to the fact that he twice vetoed pre-payment of the bonus.

Rev. G. D. Stoll and sister, Olive, of Evans City, Pa., spent from Wednesday until Saturday visiting friends here and at Spencerville. On Friday evening a reception was held at the Merritt Sechler home. About fifty friends from Spencerville and St. Joe were present. A bounteous carry-in supper was served and a very enjoyable evening was spent in visiting with their former pastor and sister. They left for their home Saturday morning accompanied by Miss Lucille Cuire, who will go on to the Eastern part of Pennsylvania, where she will spend a couple of months.

Seventy-seven DeKalb county pupils were assisted in attending school by the National Youth Administration during the school year just closed, according to Edward E. Edwards, state NYA director. Thirty-eight boys and 39 girls earned sums ranging from $6 to $52 while the average earnings per pupil for the year were $30. The Auburn, Butler, Garrett, Smithfield Township, Spencerville, and Waterloo high schools participated in the NYA aid program, providing part-time jobs to pupils on the basis of need. These needy young persons were selected by their school principals and their work was supervised by school authorities. Sixty-five of the 77 NYA pupils in DeKalb county were from relief families. The aid program is not operative during the summer.

Landon's Is Typical Kansas Family

Topeka, Kas.—"Meet the folks!" This picture of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas and his family was taken on the steps of the Landon home here. Standing, left to right: The Republican Presidential nominee himself; Mrs. Landon, and their oldest daughter, Peggy Anne, 19. Seated, left to right: Mrs. Samuel E. Cobb, mother of Mrs. Landon, holding John Cobb Landon, 3; and John Landon, the governor's father, holding Nancy Jo, 2.

All Nation Helps to Notify Landon

Topeka Prepares for Vast Throngs at July 23 Ceremonies

TOPEKA, KAS.—Plans are under way to welcome representative thousands of visitors from all over the United States for the ceremonies in which Gov. Alf M. Landon will be formally notified of his nomination as the Republican candidate for the Presidency. The notification will take place at the state capitol July 23 at 8 p. m.

To facilitate the attendance of the vast throngs who will pledge their support to Governor Landon in the November election, railroads have announced special reduced rates of one cent a mile for the occasion. Topekans already are busy arranging for parking facilities for the additional thousands who will make the trip in automobiles, and preparing the hotels for the enormous influx of visitors.

Several large groups from Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and other cities of the Middle West have indicated plans for chartering airplanes, busses and railroad trains to make the trip.

Even now the streets of the Kansas capital are bearing an unaccustomed load of automobile traffic, carrying steadily increasing tourist hordes bent upon a first-hand glimpse of the man whose popularity, with the speed and force of a typical prairie cyclone, has endeared him to the hearts of millions of Americans as the one to lead the nation out of the mire of "three long years" of New Deal sovietisms, blunders and waste.

THOUSANDS RALLY TO G. O. P.

Chicago, Ill.—Dollar contributions to the campaign fund of the Republican National committee are rolling in at the rate of 4,000 a day, according to George A. Paddock, chairman of the committee named to raise a million dollars by the sale of "participation certificates." Paddock reports that the donors to date have included many Democrats and independents who prefer Landon and Knox to Roosevelt and Garner.

The contributor who sends his dollar to Republican National Committee, Drawer S, Chicago, Illinois, receives in return a certificate which may be framed. The dollar is split "fifty-fifty" between the national committee and the county committee where the contributor lives.

Vote Half U. S. Highway Funds to Two States

Washington, D. C.—With Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes openly lobbying on the floor of the house, the lower body and the senate passed the "Blue Ridge pork bill" which calls for the construction of a 477-mile parkway through Virginia and North Carolina.

Federal highway funds, under the terms of the bill, will be given the two states outright; other states have to match federal funds dollar for dollar in highway programs. The total costs for the project will be approximately 48 million dollars, or nearly half the amount appropriated to all the states for highways.

The Rise of Hidden Taxes

Washington, D. C.—Hidden, or indirect, taxes, which are borne largely by the poor, paid 15 per cent of the cost of the government from 1928 to 1932. Since 1932 they have paid 59 per cent of the cost.

BALANCE IN KANSAS

Topeka, Kas.—Kansas, whose Gov. Alf M. Landon's policy is "deeds, not deficits," was expected to close its books on a balanced budget at the close of the fiscal year, with a bigger amount of cash on hand than it had at the end of the 1935 fiscal year, according to the report of J. J. Rhodes, state treasurer. Rhodes reported that the unencumbered cash balance in the state's general fund May 31 was $1,572,481, compared with $889,591 at the same time last year.

Wallace Paid 300 Firms 38 Million

Bares Names of Producers Who Received More Than $10,000 from AAA

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The AAA paid $38,460,000 to some 300 producers in three years for not raising crops they were in business to raise, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace revealed in a report. This is an average of approximately $128,200 a producer, but far larger lumps of the New Deal "sugar" went to the large sugar producers.

Here are a few disclosed by Wallace in response to a senate request made at the vigorous insistence of Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (Rep., Mich.) that names of those who received more than $10,000 each be bared:

Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company, Ltd., $1,022,037; Oahu Sugar Company of Hawaii, $904,562; Lihue Plantation company, Hawaii, $815,409; Ewa Plantation company, Hawaii, $751,843; Waialua Agricultural Company, Ltd., Hawaii, $740,095.

Bank Gets $705,488.

Even the National City Bank of New York apparently got paid by the AAA for not raising sugar, for it received $705,488 on the same contract by which the Eastern sugar associates of Puerto Rico received $278,810.

Largest sugar payments on the mainland went to the United States Sugar Corporation of Florida, which was paid $785,038.

Lee Wilson and Company, Mississippi county, Arkansas, received the largest cotton payments—$392,702, while the Delta and Pine Land company of Mississippi received $318,287. Oscar Johnston, manager of the AAA cotton pool, is the Delta manager.

Large Hog, Wheat Payments.

The largest hog payment went to Fantana Farms in California, $155,575.

Among the large wheat payments were $51,066 to the Campbell Farming Corporation of Montana; and a total of $134,834 to the Sutter Basin Corp., Ltd., and the Sutter Improvement Company of California.

Landon Takes First Vacation in 4 Years

Topeka, Kan.—When Gov. Alf M. Landon and his family left here for Estes Park, Colo., it was the start of the first vacation in four years for the Republican nominee for the presidency. He was to spend two weeks resting in preparation for the campaign and in writing the speech with which he will accept his formal notification of the nomination, in Topeka, July 23. In between he hoped to sandwich a little horseback riding, of which he is fond.

With the governor were Mrs. Landon and the three children, Peggy Anne, nineteen; Nancy Jo, three, and John Cobb, two, and Mrs. Samuel E. Cobb, mother of Mrs. Landon. In addition there were a few members of Governor Landon's staff.

The governor was to return for the opening of the special session of the state legislature the second week in July, but Mrs. Landon is to remain until the notification ceremonies. The children will stay all summer.

1,814,000 Acres

In 1932 there was imported into the United States a total of 344,340 bushels of corn. In 1935, under the Roosevelt acreage reduction program, the importation of corn from foreign farms amounted to 43,242,239 bushels, the production of 1,814,000 acres.

The Poor Pay the Bill

Washington, D. C.—Despite the claims of loading most of the cost burden of the New Deal on the shoulders of the rich: Income taxes paid for 55 per cent of the government spending from 1928 to 1932; in the years since 1932 they have paid for only 26 per cent of it.

Butter and Egg Market

Twenty-three thousand people were denied the opportunity for self support because of the importation from foreign countries of 34,199,683 pounds of milk, butter and eggs during 1935. The tariff policies of the Roosevelt administration were responsible.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 9, 1936 NUMBER 2

MAMMOTH THRONG SATURDAL NIGHT

The Conservation Club observance of the Fourth of July, Saturday at St. Joe, attracted a hugh crowd from throughgout this section, and provided an attendance that defied estimates especially in the evening.

Early in the afternoon people began to arrive to see the contests and to hear the address of Miss Erdean McCloud, of Fort Wayne.

Maxton Chevrolet vs St. Joe, engaged in a game of soft ball resulting in the visitors winning by 2 to 19.

By evening time there was no parking space available for blocks away from the down-town district, the crowd kept increasing until by the time of the amateur contest the streets were in a jam.

Nineteen contestants took part in the amateur night show on the band stand in the street, provided with micraphones. This event drew many, as the contestants came for as many as forty miles. The results of the judges disclosed that first prize, $10, went to Joan Hageman, Fort Wayne; second to Wayne Keester, Waterloo, $5, and third to Anna May Leavel, Corunna, $2.50, and to the rest wishes for better luck next time.

The free talkies had a capacity crowd and the home operated stands all did a good business. The event was not planned to pull in a bunch of fakirs from outside, but to have a home-folks good time, and every one really did enjoy it.

During the day there were many old time residents of the community here, greeting each other and having a good time, putting one in mind of a Home Coming.

We recall a few that you will be pleased to greet again. R. W. Brodbeck and daughter, Margaret, of Kunkle, O.; M. E. Leighty, John Baker, Dwight Hoodlemier, Auburn; Frank Smith, Garrett; Will James and wife, of Harlan; F. L. DeLauder and wife, Durand, Mich.; Wm. Henly, Charles Thayer, Perry Jump and family and Mrs. Garold Cook, Hicksville; Geo. Ridgway, Valparaiso; Mrs. A. L. Lake, Butler; John Benninghoff, Fort Wayne, and by evening they came in vast numbers and we were unable to get them registered.

The merchants all did a good business and are to be commended upon their co-operation in putting on the day's celebration.

His jaw is still in a cast, fractured two weeks ago Saturday night by a couple of Ohio youths who beat him, breaking his jaw and injuring the upper part of his body by striking him with what is thought to have been either an automobile pump or a squirt gun. Mr. High became incensed at the two young men, alleged to have committed a nuisance on his property. He resorted to the use of a squirt gun. The two youths retaliated by severely beating the aged man.

STAFFORD TOWNSHIP YOUTH ADMITS GUILT

Albert Haverstock, a youthful married man living at the east edge of Stafford township, near the Ohio line and ten miles east of Auburn, was taken into custody Thursday, a confessed chicken and pig thief.

Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm considered young Haverstock among the suspects when he heard reports of chicken stealing in that part of the county. He also was on the lookout for two pigs that had been stolen from Lawrence Green of near Metz, Steuben county.

While making a survey of the situation, the sheriff found the stolen pigs at Haverstock's place. He also observed a flock of chickens. He summoned Jay Fetters, of Concord township, Milt Keller, of Newville township, and Louis Washler, of Spencer township, all of whom had recently reported chicken thefts. They went to the Haverstock place and identified the chickens as their own. Confronted with this evidence, Haverstock admitted his guilt.

A report also was made to the sheriff that Haverstock sold three lots of chickens at Carl Brickel's poultry yard at Butler in May, that he disposed of 23½ pounds of heavy hens there June 17; and that he sold 24 pounds of heavy hens June 20.

Haverstock was sentenced to the state farm Monday by Judge Endicott to serve 60 days. He was fined $100 and the costs. He further confessed to having taken chickens from Robert Johnson of Concord and Donald Casebeer of Wilmington township.

LOW LOG DAM CONSTRUCTION STARTED

Two log dams have been completed in Jackson township, by Herman Walsh, county superintendent of low log dam coonstruction and financed thrugh the WPA. The two mentioned are located on the George and Deitrick farms, the latter affording a splendid brooding pond for fish. Stone and material were placed on the ground last week for a similar dam on the Frank Tustison farm, which will raise the water sufficient to liven his gravel pit, for a breeding place. An outlet will be made to the pit, preventing stagnation of the water.

As Viewed In 2136

"In 2136 the western, adventure and detective stories which we are now reading for fun are going to be read by scholars for information about the life and customs of 1936," according to Dr. Ruth Benedict, assistant professor of anthropology at Columbia university.

"And if those who study our 1936 westerns in 2136 should take them as gospel truth—as they are in some parts of the world—it would appear that you couldn't get west of Hoboken without a six-gun, a horse, and a 10-gallon hat."

Tall Tales

THE RETURN OF PETEY

A CARRIER pigeon can be relied on to do the spectacular.

Glenn Butcher, doughboy of the Sixth infantry, after serving his country in France, established a pigeon farm near Lockport, Ill. Liking all pigeons, his greatest affection was reserved for a carrier named Petey.

Petey demonstrated once that Butcher's love was reciprocated. It was when an unidentified fiend visited Lockport, committed a score of crimes and concluded by stealing Petey and taking him to Chicago.

Butcher learned later the thief climbed to the top of the tallest building in Chicago, unfastened Petey and threw him overboard. Then, to show his fiendish nature, the kidnaper threw a wooden box at the falling bird.

The pigeon broke a leg in his 600-foot fall but retrieved the box, which landed nearby, and hobbled toward the river. There he produced a swagger stick Butcher had used in France, climbed on the box and, steering a winding course by means of the stick, started home.

Bulletins told of the pigeon navigator's progress, but Petey was too proud to accept aid. He negotiated the 45 miles of river channel alone in seven days, limping into Butcher's yard one morning, swagger stick under his wing. It not only gave him a jaunty appearance but served for a crutch as well.

AN 8-INCH TALE

SHELL games are not the only activity wherein the hand may be quicker than the eye.

So ruminates Buck Pyle, once of Clarendon, Texas, when he recalls the famous hunting trip undertaken by two of his father's ranch hands.

The cowboys, Sam and Henry, found buffalo tracks almost immediately. They spied two buffalo, and each fired at a different animal.

Henry's buffalo sped over a mountain range with Henry in close pursuit and was lost to view. Sam wounded his game and the injured buffalo charged. His pony wheeled, slipped into the deep grass and unseated the rider.

Sam rose to a sitting position, terrified at the approach of the huge animal. He ducked just as the charging buffalo hurtled past, then he straightened suddenly, grasped the wounded buffalo by the tail and hung on.

He could not hope to subdue the maddened beast, but neither could the animal attack him. So Sam clung to the buffalo's eight-inch tail until just before the wild runner crossed the Mexican boundary. Then he reached out with a poplar tree he'd gathered en route, tickled the buffalo's nose and turned him back.

When Sam had guided the buffalo in this fashion until they reached Donley county, Henry rode up and rescued his friend.

The regrettable effect of the incident, says Pyle, is that Sam won't accept a buffalo nickel now, even if you offer him three for a dime.

THE EXTENDED PALM

A GREATER number of extended palms can be found in the state of Florida than in all of France.

One of them, a royal palm, grows in front of the ninth green of the De Leon Springs golf course, its foliage frequently catching balls pitched toward the green.

That happened to John H. Fisher of Chicago the first time he stepped on the De Leon Springs links to try for his usual 76. The ball lodged in the tree and only the gift of a 59-cent dollar persuaded his colored caddie to retrieve it.

Climbing to the top of the tree the caddie gave one vigorous shake and Fisher's ball and 376 other golf balls dropped. It was the first time the royal palm had been shaken.

The golfer was astonished to discover that thirteen of the balls had his name printed on them.

"It was my initial visit to Florida, all right, but that was no reason my entire name should have been printed on the balls," Fisher said later. "I didn't discover why until four months afterwards.

"I play the Tam o'Shanter course at Chicago. On the fifth tee I invariably slice my drive, frequently losing the ball. Well, I began to analyze my shots off that tee, employing a compass and other research equipment.

"And I discovered a most interesting thing—every one of my sliced shots off that fifth tee moved in a curving line directly toward De Leon Springs from Chicago."

Early Strikes in America

The first recorded strike in America took place in 1741, when New York bakers quit work as a protest against a municipal ordinance regulating the price of bread. The earliest known strike for higher wages took place in 1786, when the Philadelphia printers ceased work as a means of enforcing their demand for a minimum weekly wage of $6. The first organized strike in America took place in 1799, when the shoemakers belonging to the Federal Society of Journeymen Cordwainers, were compelled to lay down their tools in order to aid the bootmakers who were seeking an increase in wages.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

ONE of our readers in a quandary about whether, with handsome chromium electric appointments for her tea table, she should leave them out or not. The vogue of having everything in evidence has swerved in the other direction, and today it is considered better form to bring in the tea tray with its appointments when it is time to serve the tea. If after-dinner coffee is served it is prepared in the kitchen and served in cups, or from an after dinner coffee pot, tall and slender, on the tray.

When the vogue of having daily tea in the afternoon was accepted in United States from England, the tea table with its dainty equipments, was kept all laid in the living room, ready for the hot water, and the accompanying edibles to be brought in. The tea caddy was by the teapot, and cups and saucers, etc., as soon as washed and dried, were returned on the tea tray in readiness for the next day.

The New Way.

Now this tea table with its fittings is eliminated as part of the furnishings. The table may be a tea table or a coffee table. Or any one of the various occasional tables which are lower than regular tables may be used equally well. It is the style today for such tables to be left bare when not actually in use, and so be ready for book or tea tray, for coffee tray, for ash trays, work basket, etc., as the immediate wishes of the occupants of the room prefer. Even in the dining room, the fitted tea tray is not in evidence, and the tea wagon is left bare.

After all this is a rather good plan, for, especially in cities, dishes, remaining out in a room do get dusty very soon. As a matter of fact this is one of the chief reasons why the vogue of having the tea things out was changed. When such changes as this occur, it is plain to see that common sense is back of the vogue.

Garment Hangers.

Those who are accustomed to keeping garments on coat hangers continually will find that the material in shoulders of clothes becomes tender before the rest of the textile. This is due to the weight of the garments always coming on the shoulder portions, and also to the slight friction of garment with its hanger as the frock is jostled, however little, when moved or brushed against in the closet. To reduce this wear and tear, it is important to have proper coat hangers.

The assortment of hangers is sufficient for selection of different ones for different purposes. For garments that are not in constant use but remain on hangers choose those with loop wire arms. Pad the arms to soften them, and cover the padding with silk, velvet, muslin, etc., as the purse and preference dictate.

Materials for Coverings.

Velvet has a surface that is both soft and clinging, and is well liked. Garments do not fall from hangers so covered, as easily as from textiles with a sheen. Muslin is favored because it is not bulky and can be laundered readily to look like new. Silk is a deluxe covering and, as so small a quantity is required for a hanger, the cost is trifling. This expense is reduced to nothing when remnants of material used in lingerie or dressmaking are put to this purpose.

The wide wooden hangers are a second choice for garments not in constant use. These can be covered, by winding with strips of textile, or bias material can be seamed over them. The disadvantage of this type of hanger is its weight, which is a consideration when many hangers are on one rod. The narrower wood hangers can be covered with knit or crocheted strips caught with stitches about the arms. These are excellent for ordinary use, but any hanger with a very narrow top to the arms will wear shoulders much more quickly than the kind with broad shoulder supports for garments.

Safeguard Posts.

Fence posts and uprights for yard swings—as a matter of fact, any wooden post that is to be sunk in the ground—should be well protected from the moisture in the earth. The wood should be thoroughly soaked in creosote or double-coated with this material. A coat of asphalt paint may then be applied. Such treatment will prevent rotting and the destruction of the wood by insects.

Paint Oil from Grapes

Grape seed oil, the Department of Commerce reports, is being used as substitute material in Germany for technical uses in the paint, varnish, linoleum, soap and artificial leather industries. This oil is obtained from the seeds of grapes.

JAM AND JELLY SEASON IS HERE

New Processes Largely Do Away With Luck Element.

By EDITH M. BARBER

ONE of the things to which the modern housekeeper must bow if she delights in making her own jams and jellies is the season. Although seasons are lengthened today through the contribution made to our markets by distant points, local products when at their height, are usually the economical source of materials for preserving.

Although we are all anxious, of course, to take advantage of bargain prices, it is not necessary to go in for wholesale production nowadays. It is seldom that we buy berries by the crate and other fruits by the bushel. We will have more certain results if we attempt to make up small quantities at a time. While jams and marmalades must usually be finished after they are started, jellies on the other hand may have their preparation divided. The fruit juices may be extracted from the cooked fruit and sealed in clean, hot jars until just the right time is found to make them up into jelly.

Jelly making is today no longer nearly so much the matter of luck that it was years ago. If you use the quick process which demands the combination of fruit juice with bottled pectin, your jelly will always jell if you follow directions carefully.

If you prefer the older method you may test your juice by combining a tablespoon of alcohol with the same amount of juice. This test will show you what proportion of sugar to use with your fruit juice. If, after standing a moment, the product makes a thick jelly which can be lifted on a spoon without breaking, you may use a cup of sugar to a cup of juice. Currants, green grapes and apples are the fruits which may take this much.

If you have a jelly softer than the other when you make your test you should estimate three-quarters of a cup of sugar to one cup of juice. If you get neither test, use the pectin method or combine the juice with currant or green apple juice which contains a good deal of natural pectin and then retest. Raspberry and currant are often combined on this account as well as because of the resulting flavor.

In preparing fruit for juice crush it in a heavy preserving kettle, adding a small quantity at a time without additional water, except for apples and quinces when water to almost cover will be necessary. Currants should not be stemmed. They should cook until they look white. Raspberries and strawberries should be crushed and just brought to a boil. Both must also be combined with pectin.

In making jam, prepare the fruit in the same way and add an equal quantity of sugar gradually for the old-fashioned runny type. If you prefer a firmer jam you will, of course, need pectin.

Jelly should be put into clean, hot glasses and covered immediately with a thin layer of paraffin. When cold another coating may be added. Jams and marmalades may be put into jelly glasses or into jars which should be sealed immediately. Strawberries, currants, raspberries, cherries and gooseberries are the fruits which are available in early summer.

Strawberry Conserve.

1 pound strawberries
1 pound rhubarb
1½ pounds sugar
1 cup sliced Brazil nuts

Wash and hull the strawberries. Wash rhubarb and slice in small pieces, but do not peel. Add the strawberries with the sugar and crush, add rhubarb and cook until thick, about thirty minutes. Add nuts and pour into clean, hot jars.

Blackberry Jelly.

4 cups (two pounds) berry juice
2 tablespoons lemon juice
8 cups (3½ pounds) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush thoroughly or grind about three quarts fully ripe berries. Place in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. Squeeze and strain juice from one medium lemon. Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add fruit pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard one-half minute. Remove from fire, skim, pour quickly into clean, hot jars and seal.

Spiced Gooseberries.

1 cup vinegar
3 cups sugar (brown)
1 teaspoon whole cloves
Few sticks cinnamon
1 tablespoon salt
⅛ tablespoon cayenne
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ ounce ginger root
4 pints gooseberries

Cook the vinegar and the sugar five minutes. Tie the spices in a bag, add with remaining ingredients, cook slowly one hour. Pack and seal.

Preserved Cherries.

4 pounds cherries
4 pounds granulated sugar

Wash the cherries, remove the stems and stones. Cover the cherries with the sugar and let stand two hours. Set on the stove and bring slowly to boiling point. Cook until the cherries are tender. Fill the hot jars and seal. Currants and huckleberries may be preserved in the same way.

POULTRY

SEMI-SCALD PLAN BEST FOR PICKING

Gives Dressed Birds Plump, Clean Appearance.

By J. C. Taylor, Extension Poultryman, New Jersey College of Agriculture.
WNU Service.

Poultrymen who sell dressed broilers and fowls at retail this year should realize that the slack-scald or semi-scald method of picking the birds is the most satisfactory.

When the slack-scald method is used, dressed birds have the plump, clean appearance and the keeping qualities of dry-picked birds, yet they are free of torn skin which is often found on dry-picked broilers.

The slack-scald method consists of immersing the bird for 30 seconds in water heated to a temperature of 126 to 130 degrees Fahrenheit. For broilers the water temperature should be from 126 to 128 degrees, while fowls require a higher temperature of 128 to 130 degrees. Higher temperatures produce scald spots which often result from the ordinary method of scalding, but lower temperatures will not loosen the feathers.

Bleeding must be complete before scalding, otherwise red crops will result. Move the birds backward and forward in the water to make sure the water reaches the skin through the feathers. Remove the feathers by pulling rather than rubbing them off.

When all feathers have been removed, immerse the carcass in cold water for 15 to 20 minutes, then transfer it to ice water for three hours. This will remove the body heat and improve the keeping qualities of the bird.

Candling Used to Detect Eggs Not Good for Food

Candling consists of holding an egg at an angle of 45 degrees, large end up, and twirling it before a light which is placed behind so that it will shine through a circular opening; an arrangement that virtually constitutes a candle, states a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

By looking at the egg toward this light, working in darkened quarters, you can determine the interior quality. You can check the size of the air cell and the condition of the egg yolk.

Likewise, candling makes it possible for you to detect and remove eggs containing "blood spots," or eggs unfit for food.

The air cell, the shadow of which you can see when candling, is an air space usually found at the large end of the egg. It is about the size of a dime when the egg is cooled. Since the egg shell is porous, evaporation occurs inside the egg and the air cell increases in depth as the contents of the egg decreases in volume.

Chicks Like Coal Ashes

Chicks like grit in some form and it is likely that they eat that found in coal ashes. The composition of coal ashes varies with different deposits of that mineral. Carbon is the chief and most valuable constituent of coal, being in greatest proportion in hard, or anthracite coal. The ash, after burning, may contain such mineral impurities as iron and lime. This is not harmful to chicks, but there is no reason for considering it of any greater value than that afforded by its content of grit, says an authority in the Rural New-Yorker.

Tips for Poultrymen

Canadians are said to be the greatest egg eaters in the world.

* * *

Experiments show that baby chicks may be fed safely from 24 to 72 hours after hatching.

* * *

Much of the feed of the chickens, especially on the farms of the commercial raisers, comes from the feed mill.

* * *

Most every farm can find a waste place where geese will thrive and turn a profit that now gives none. Such a place is a swampy area large or small, fenced to keep the geese where they belong.

* * *

It costs approximately 80 eggs a year to feed a hen, whether it is a good layer or a poor one.

* * *

Roundworms of the intestines, yellowish-white, a half inch to four inches long, are parasites causing birds to droop and fail.

* * *

Automatic drinking fountains on the poultry farm will save labor. Each hundred birds in good condition will drink four to five gallons of water a day. This means about six tons of water a year.

* * *

Ganders or males are usually larger, have coarser thicker heads, longer necks and a shriller higher pitched voice.

* * *

Removal of Leghorn cockerels when three to six weeks of age is absolutely necessary if best results are to be secured with the pullets.

* * *

The care and management of breeding birds is an important factor governing the fertility of their eggs and the livability of the chicks secured.

Clarendon's Influence

The right man in the right place at the right time often can change destiny, as appears from a story told about the Franco-Prussian war. Lord Clarendon, Britain's foreign minister, died just three weeks before the war's opening. How powerful his influence was is seen by the fact that a year after the war, Clarendon's daughter sat next to Bismarck in Berlin when Bismarck turned to her and said: "Never in my life was I more glad to hear anything than I was to hear of your father's death . . . had he lived, he would have prevented the war."

In the small square house where the dynamo stood greasy and unresponsive, Bryn detached a pair of overalls from a peg on the wall and climbed into them. "Now," he said, when Gary had given him the pathological history of the electric plant, "if you'll go and prepare a large and delectable dinner, and leave me alone in my glory, I'll see what's to be done, Gary."

There was, as Bryn had suspected, nothing seriously wrong with the engine of the electric plant. He opened the cocks to drain out all the old oil, cleaned the connections, and made a note of the few parts it would be necessary to replace. Before the motor was started, he decided, it would be wise to inspect the connections at the house. He removed the greasy overalls, hung them on the peg.

He went to the kitchen and got a drink. Gary was shelling peas. All morning, as Bryn knew, he and Deborah had spent making strawberry jam; and now every window-sill was filled with small ruby jars which caught and held the sunlight.

"Where's there a ladder?" he asked.

"Out on the edge of the orchard," Gary told him. "But you better be careful of it. It isn't as good as it might be."

Bryn went out behind the house and followed with his eye the line of the electric wires as they crossed the trees and the brook. He went out to the orchard, lifted the ladder lying half-hidden in the grass, carried it back and propped it up against the wall of the house, beneath the place where the wires entered. Trying each rung cautiously, he went up the ladder.

As he reached the top he turned half-around as he took the pliers from his pocket, and was just in time to see Deborah emerge from her retreat down near the bridge. He did not look at her, but went busily to work, whistling blithely, attacking the wires at their point of connection with the house.

There was a sudden ominous cracking which Bryn scarcely heard; he was listening for Deborah's footstep on the path beside him, wondering whether to look down and smile or to continue absorbedly with his work. He was spared the necessity of making a choice; for, a moment after the unheeded warning, the rung upon which he was standing collapsed into splinters, and Bryn fell neatly through. He heard Deborah scream; the puppy barked furiously; and then he dropped into oblivion.

He awoke, a few moments later, with something cold dashing across his forehead, and the sound of Deborah's voice saying in a whisper, "More, Gary, get more, quick!" The sound of footsteps. Bryn lay motionless, collecting himself. He was not hurt. He knew he was not hurt. The grass was thick, here, and he had broken his fall; his head had probably been whacked just hard enough to put him out for a minute or two. He did not open his eyes. Deborah was beside him. She put her hand on his forehead, lifted the wet hair back from his brow.

She bent over him. "Don't die," she whispered like a breath. "Don't die, please don't die."

He moved his head faintly, and lifted his hand. He would find hers . . . with his wedding ring on it . . . he would hold it firmly, and tell her . . . her little white hand . . . he groped for it.

Something soft and light fell on his cheek, a delicate gentle touch. He caught his breath and held it. The touch came again, gentle, on his cheek, at the side of his mouth. He threw off his pretense of weakness, put his hand up quickly, opened his eyes, his heart thumping; and found himself clutching with both hands the puppy, nosing him in an anxiety of curiosity. Deborah was gone.

He got up with the puppy under his arm and strolled grimly around the corner, to meet Gary, wild-eyed, approaching with a brimming dipper of water.

"You aren't hurt, sir?" Gary gasped breathlessly. "Aren't you hurt?"

"Not a scratch," Bryn replied. "Sorry to frighten you."

"Well, that is good," Gary said with heartfelt emotion. "I got a terrible fright. And Miss Deborah was coming to the house and saw you fall. She . . ." he stopped.

"She what?" Bryn asked calmly.

"She's crying."

Evening came on again; dinner was served in the dining room, brighter now with a host of tall tapers. Grandmother was happy tonight, gay and light hearted. When dinner was over she wanted to go for a little stroll.

It was a glorious night. The moon had already risen, and hung, a huge silver lamp, just over the top of the lowest hill. The sky was deep blue. Grandmother leaned on Bryn's arm; Deborah was on her other side.

They came back to the front porch at last, but Grandmother did not stop. She did not seem to notice their awkward silences. She walked to the corner of the house, and there, gently, she withdrew from between them and tucked Deborah's arm in Bryn's.

"There, my darlings," she said, with the ghost of a laugh. "Walk together down the path beside the brook. It's a perfect night for lovers. I am going in now. Good night!" and before Deborah's hand could stop her, or Bryn's words could form themselves, she was gone.

"Very nice night," Bryn said formally.

"Yes," Deborah agreed after a moment.

She glanced up at him in the moonlight, but his face was cool and unmoved. Wordless, she followed his lead, walking quietly beside him. They went slowly down along the brook.

They were almost at the end of the path. He had not spoken. She lifted her head. "I'm . . . I'm sorry you fell and hurt yourself," she said in that delicious low voice with the tiny break.

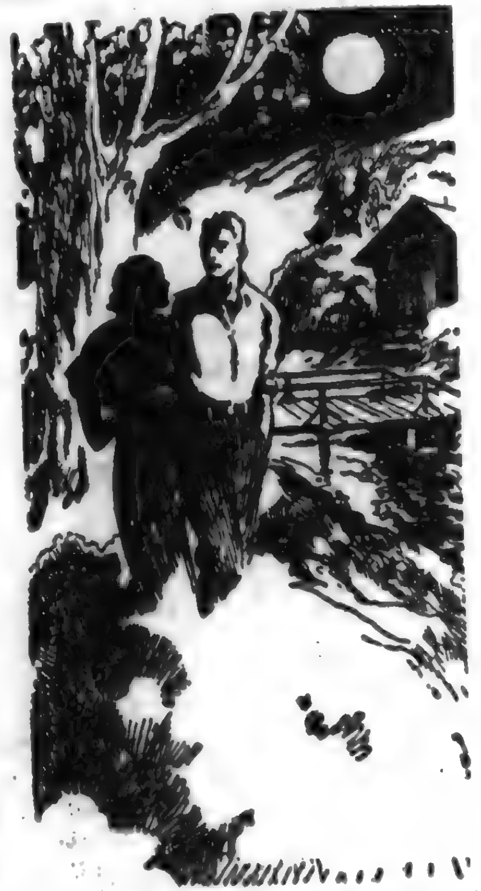
"I didn't hurt myself," Bryn said calmly. "Sorry to cause a commotion."

They reached the end of the path. Bryn turned. Deborah hesitated, but, after a second, turned beside him. Half-way to the house she hesitated. "It was . . . kind of you to remember tobacco for Gary," she said. "I didn't realize why he wasn't smoking."

Bryn did not reply.

Almost back at the house, she spoke again. Her voice held a hint of desperation. "It . . . it is a lovely night, isn't it?" she said.

"I think it's a little chilly," Bryn replied. "Do you suppose your grandmother thinks we've been out long enough now?"



"I'm Sorry You Fell and Hurt Yourself."

She stopped and looked up at him. And as he looked down at her, she turned away with a little droop in her shoulders, and left him.

* * *

Deborah stood against the stone railing of the balcony, surveying the changes taking place in her little world, and was thoroughly miserable. Everyone seemed to be in a conspiracy against her. Grandmother was very happy; her cheeks grew pinker every day, her appetite had improved. Grandmother, of course, thought that Deborah was happy too. She didn't begin to realise how empty life was now, and how lost and forlorn Deborah was beginning to feel. It hadn't occurred to her that this dream of hers which had come true had never been Deborah's dream.

Yes, Bryn was making Grandmother happy; but that was frightening. Because, at the end of the year . . .

And one couldn't dream of making a bargain with him to continue the play acting until . . . until Grandmother didn't need anyone any longer. That would be years and years, Deborah hoped. And he had his own life to live, his own career to carve out, his own . . . well, his own girl to marry.

Deborah fell to wondering what his own girl was like. She would be beautiful, of course, and probably tall and queenly, instead of little and childish. It was difficult to understand what her circumstances were that she would allow him to make money for her in such a strange way. If she were wealthy, surely they would have been married whether he had money or not. If she were poor, one would think that she would have been willing to marry him and share his difficult times with him. There must be something about her that Deborah didn't understand.

Deborah moved suddenly from the balcony railing and went inside her own pretty bedroom; and there she flung herself on the bed and cried miserably into the silver and violet spread.

After a long time she sat up and dried her eyes. There wasn't anything to cry about. What if they had laughed at her? She would never see the girl, and the girl would never see her. As for the man, they were as distant from each other as any two people could possibly be, who had to act at intervals an affectionate little comedy. The other night she had tried, it was true, to be friendly. She had tried to apologize for not accepting his assistance with better grace, to tell him how sorry she was that he had been hurt while trying to help her; and he hadn't allowed her to be friendly. He had been cold and unresponsive, and she hated him for it. But it was better for him to be so. Far better. There wasn't anything between them but the relation of an employer to a servant; he had said so himself.

She got down from the bed and tiptoed to the door. No one was about, she knew that. The maids had been here for two days, and the cook as well, but they were all down in the living room with Gary, putting it in order.

Deborah went through the back door and down the path to her old playhouse.

WINONO LAKE MUSIC FESTIVAL FOR MALE VOICES

August 13, at 8: P. M., CST

Winona Lake, Ind., July 7.—Only a decade ago a few musicians were responsible for having the twelve best Male Glee Clubs in the East to participate in a festival that drew much comment in music circles and that started a wave of male chorus singing all over the country.

The Federated Music Clubs and public spirited men and women have fostered ideals which, in spite of degenerate influences, are showing fruit in many communities throughout our land. The Federated Music Clubs and the Music Educators National Conference have both been instrumental in stimulating interest in this same direction. School contests and music festivals, largely instrumental in nature, are familiar to all.

The Winona Lake Music Festival is a contest held exclusively for male voices to foster greater interest in better music adapted to male voices. Too, the unemployment situation and shorter working hours are giving many more time to spend in leisure and profitable pastime. This innovation, in the light of existing conditions, seems to us to be a worthy effort to stimulate a renewed interest in good music as an art and foster the cultural benefits and aesthetic values that are generally recognized in good music. It is the desire of the sponsors to so popularize this Music Festival for Male Voices, that it will become an annual affair such as The Chicagoland Music Festival and the Northern Indiana Eisteddfod.

This Music Festival, under the direction of Ethel Stuart Gaumer, South Bend, Ind., is sponsored by the Winona School of Sacred Music of which Homer Rodeheaver is President and James Heaton is Executive Manager. This is not a profit making idea but arises from the intense desire of Mr. Rodeheaver to encourage students of singing and choral organizations to better work.

Adjudicators will be Dr. George L. Tenney and Professor Rollin Pease, both nationally known musicians and a third to be chosen.

Further information and a Preliminary Program may be secured by writing Ethel Stuart Gaumer, 701 Lindsey Ave., South Bend, Indiana, or Mr. James Heaton, Winona Lake.

Old Bryan Paper Bolts Roosevelt

Omaha, Neb.—The Omaha World-Herald, for 50 years one of the leading Democratic newspapers of the Middle West and once edited by William Jennings Bryan, has definitely stamped itself as opposed to President Roosevelt and the New Deal policies his administration stands for.

"Mr. Roosevelt, as earnestly and passionately as Hitler once did, assails our own capitalist system," says the World-Herald editorial.

"By his sweeping onslaught Mr. Roosevelt has precipitated uncompromising war between the government he heads and private enterprise . . .

"And just as long as that war rages, the billions of credit and money tied up in the banks, idle and unused, will remain idle and unused. The millions of idle workers will remain unused, unless it be on public labor . . .

"This newspaper believes the American system, both economic and political, is not so desperately sick, so hopeless beyond cure, that it is necessary to kill and replace it with an order alien to our traditions, repugnant to all our aspirations."

Roosevelt Slips, Gallup Reveals

New York City.—A definite swing away from President Roosevelt since the nomination of Landon and Knox by the Republicans at Cleveland and since the Democratic national convention at Philadelphia is indicated in the latest poll reported by the "American Institute of Public Opinion."

On June 7 the Gallup poll showed the President as having 56 per cent of the popular vote against the field. With the campaigns definitely under way following the national conventions, the poll released July 12 showed the President's popular vote as having been reduced to 51.8 per cent, and having shrunk more in some cases in states normally Republican or doubtful.

A survey conducted among 3,000 persons in every walk of life by Fortune magazine indicated that after three years of the New Deal 59 per cent of the persons questioned feel that they are no better off.

A $20,000,000,000 Congress

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

While America floundered in floods of Convention oratory, the Seventy-fourth Congress recently ended its sessions.

Few citizens noted — and probably fewer regretted—its passing. But they should have noted it. For the Seventy-fourth Congress had done many things which will have a profound and lasting effect on the average American and his pocketbook.

Here's part of the record:

It appropriated almost Twenty Billion Dollars of the public's money.

It boosted the Federal debt to Thirty-four Billion Dollars—according to statisticians, an all-time high.

It passed numerous acts which the Supreme Court has decided violate the Constitution.

It greatly increased the number of appointed boards and bureaus and committees which so frequently invade the people's rights.

It engaged in many other activities—some commendable, some not.

But to the great majority of American workers and earners, the new records reached in spending public funds and in tinkering with our Constitutional rights represent the most significant of recent Congressional activities.

Why?

Because when Congress spends Federal funds, it's actually spending our money. We, the people, have to dig it up.

When Congress boosts the Federal debt, it's actually boosting our debts. We, the people, have to meet both principal and interest.

When Congress ignores the Federal Constitution, it's actually ignoring our Constitution. It's the people's Bill of Rights.

Of their amazing record, members of the Seventy-fourth Congress may or may not be proud. In either event they can have the credit, while we, the people, pay the bills—whether in reduced incomes, in expanded public debt, or in the loss of liberties guaranteed under the Constitution.

A Twenty-Billion-Dollar Congress can put on a spectacular show. But to us, the people, it's an expensive luxury.

Fourth Time for Holiday Parties

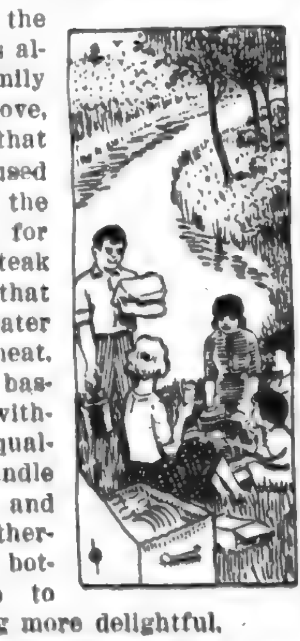
THE Fourth of July, the most important holiday of the summer season, while still of great historical importance, is celebrated in a very nonchalant and sane manner. To the majority of persons it means a lazy day spent in the country or at the beach, with dinner served picnic-fashion, under the open sky. Or, another popular method of celebration, writes Ethel K. Ehlen in the Detroit News, is to invite a few friends in for luncheon, cocktails or dinner—very informal and served on the porch or terrace.

Buffet service continues in popularity, and is equally suitable for entertaining in town or country. Even a picnic menu may go buffet style these days, and it is a very satisfactory manner of service. If this version is selected for celebration in the country or at the beach, paper table cloths, dishes, spoons and forks, simplify matters considerably. And, the setting may be just as attractive as that in which the conventional china and silver are used. A red, white and blue color scheme may be easily arranged, as patriotic appointments in a number of different versions are available.

If the hostess desires something a bit more formal in character, there is a red satin cannon center-piece, which may be filled with surprise favors, and red satin firecrackers as candy or salted nut containers.

For the children's Fourth of July party, red, white and blue snappers and a table centerpiece consisting of a blue patent leather bag, tied with the patriotic tri-colors and filled with surprise packages wrapped in cellophane, is timely and a little unusual. This clever bag of favors is also nice as a gift to a small child.

Nautical decorations in red, white and blue are cool and summery looking and an innovation in patriotic ensembling for the table. Frosted beverages may be invitingly served in tall crystal glasses decorated with navy blue anchors, ships, and the like, the red note being supplied by the cherry garnish, and repeated in the tiny sandwiches which may be cut in the shape of a firecracker. Ice cream and ices, so important in the American summer menu, will be available for the important holiday in suitable color schemes and designs, and may be packed in dry ice for carrying to the beach as dessert for the picnic lunch.



Numerous handy equipment is available for both cooking under the open sky, or adequately packing picnic menus which have been prepared at home. One of the additions to this already large family is a miniature stove, so constructed that paper may be used as the fuel for the fire; or, twigs for such things as steak and other foods that require a greater amount of heat. Wicker picnic baskets, with or without insulating qualities; long-handle forks, broilers and frying pans; thermos jugs and bottles; all help to make picnicking more delightful.

A perfectly grand kind of picnic basket is a kit of leather, simulated leather or wicker, completely equipped with utensils, china and cutlery, and plenty of separate compartments for packing sandwiches, salads, relishes, desserts and so on.

Cellophane is a wonderful picnic aid for wrapping practically any kind of picnic edibles. Paper table mats, table cloths and napkins, are fashioned of white and designed in such a manner they have the appearance of linen. Paper cups have gone more attractive and practical too—late versions are equipped with handles, which makes drinking an easier process. They, as well as plates and serving dishes are patterned after china, having a smart gold band as the effective decorative medium.

The Fourth of July celebration in the modern manner may take the form of a picnic in quite primitive fashion, or in a more pretentious style, like that just described. Or, if one does not yearn for the open road and sunny beach, the holiday may be gloriously celebrated with informal entertaining at home, with appointments and decorations in patriotic themes. Any of these interpretations are timely and in keeping with the modern scheme of things.

Continental Congress' Meeting

It was in Carpenters' hall, a short distance east of Independence square, that the first Continental congress assembled on September 5, 1774. The second Continental congress met in Independence hall, May 10, 1775.

SOME IDEAS ON SUMMER MEALS

Housewife Can Avoid Long Hours Over Stove.

By EDITH M. BARBER

SUMMER time should be play time for the housekeeper as well as for the rest of the family who usually have vacations, short or long from business or school. Unless she is away from home her responsibilities go on just the same but she should take the summer easily and plan to spend as little time as possible in the kitchen. Meals should be planned with the idea of making as many cooked dishes as possible serve more than once. Picnic and porch meals where most of the food is prepared ahead or where the cooking over the open fire can be passed over to another member of the family are often a great help.

It is a good idea to have always on hand one or more kinds of cold meat which is served hot the day it is cooked and can be served cold the second day and made into creamed or combination dishes another time. Before the ham, for instance, is gone a tongue or a piece of corn beef should be cooked. This will give us a luncheon or a supper of cold cuts on the day when we serve both ham and another meat. A different sauce will make a pleasant variation for the same roast. A tomato or piquant sauce for tongue while it is hot and a tartare sauce when it is cold.

I can never decide whether I like smoked tongue or just a plain boiled tongue best, you can have each at different times. By the way, small calves' tongues are delicious when you can get them.

Corned beef is so good for a summer boiled dinner with a few vegetables which I prefer to cook separately. The new cabbage with vinegar, baby carrots with butter, glazed onions and baked potatoes with paprika make the usual corn beef dinner seem pale by comparison.

Cold corned beef with horseradish sauce, just whipped cream seasoned with horseradish or the chili sauce is too well known to need to be advertised as the favorite American dish. And as for corned beef hash with or without a poached egg—restaurants have gained fame for this dish alone.

Meat naturally leads us to potatoes. Always bake or boil enough for two meals at one time. Served hot for one meal they can be made into au gratin, hashed brown, or perhaps best of all plain stewed potatoes.

A cake which keeps well is a help. Enough pastry for several pies can be made at one time. Perhaps we will have a strawberry pie for dinner one day and later in the week tarts or a "sho fly" pie made of the left-over crust for lunch.

The pantry shelf should be kept well supplied with ready-to-use foods in summer—soups, canned fish, olives, pickles, savory pastes for quick meals. A pot of home made baked beans will serve several meals.

Gelatin salads which can be made one day and served the next often make the day's meals easier.

If meals are carefully planned always with consideration for the cook, whether it is the housekeeper herself or someone else, the summer meals will be just as good and just as appetizing as if twice the time were spent on their preparation. A few moments' thought may save an hour of work, quite worth while especially in warm weather.

Corned Beef Hash.

2 cups chopped cooked corned beef
3 cups potatoes
2 onions, sliced
2 tablespoons fat
Salt
Pepper
½ cup milk
2 tablespoons fat

Mix the ingredients and place in a baking dish and bake in a hot oven (450 degrees F.) twenty minutes or cook in a frying pan until the milk is absorbed, stirring constantly. Let brown on the bottom and fold like an omelet. If cooked in the latter way more fat may be added to the hash as necessary.

Boiled Ham.

Soak ham several hours or over night in cold water. Cover with fresh cold water, heat to boiling point and cook slowly until tender, four or five hours. Remove the kettle from the range and set aside that the ham may partially cool; then take from the water, remove the outside skin, sprinkle with brown sugar and fine cracker crumbs, and stick with cloves one-half inch apart. Bake one hour in a moderate oven (325 degrees F.).

Spice Cake.

1 cup brown sugar

Ironing Hint

Do not sprinkle all your linen napkins when preparing for ironing. Dip every third napkin into clear, warm water, place one between the dry napkins, fold and roll together. Napkins dampened in this way are easily ironed.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Artistic Goat

GEORGIA'S delightful climate gave continuous employment to the goats owned by that eminent Atlantan, Pat Candler Dinkins.

The goats were Sandy and Mandy. Mandy was tied in the barn most of the time. Pat noticed casually that she amused herself by plaiting straw into various shapes and sizes.

Sandy went out at night to attack trespassers. There was the pecan grove in the fall and luscious Georgia watermelons to be guarded every summer. And not a night passed but Sandy returned with scraps of clothing his horns had speared from the hind quarters of some pickaninny whose judgment had surrendered to his appetite.

Pat says Sandy was invaluable as watchman and that the materials he brought in invariably were scraped from Sandy's horns into the goat stall. Size and color of samples depended, of course, on what white folks of the neighborhood had worn the year before.

"I was proud of Sandy," Pat confesses, "but I didn't appreciate Mandy until I sneaked into the stall with a flashlight one night and learned how she used her spare time.

"There she was, calm and contented as can be, weaving a beautiful rag rug from the materials that Sandy'd brought in.

"Whenever we need carpets up at the house now I simply drop a supply of rags into Mandy's stall when it's real dark and make a scraping noise like Sandy's horns. That goat can weave four 3 by 6 rugs in one week and take a day off besides."

Ring 'Round Rosy

IN MILAN, TENN., where a specialty is claimed for watermelons, fine baseball clubs and tomato crops, they brag about their fat girl.

This lady, according to Bruce Oliver, was the most enormous gal inhabiting West Tennessee.

Nobody knew her name, said Bruce, because no one ever got that close to her. Just in fun he called her Rosy.

She came over to Milan from the nearby town of McKenzie and almost immediately was besieged with suitors. The most persistent of these was Bruce himself.

He used to visit the damsel, sit out on the porch with her and feed her ice cream from a double freezer. When the bottom of the freezer was reached, Bruce, sorely smitten by the fat girl's charms, was inclined to grow serious in his love making. He wasn't disillusioned even when she confessed she slept in a bed strewn with cinders to prevent her rolling off.

Bruce was a persistent cuss, he admitted. In attempting to express his true feelings he would place an arm part way around the fat girl. When he had reached as far as possible he would mark his position with a pink crayon. Then he would move around to the mark, resume a posture of affection, and so gradually encircle the waist of the girl he worshiped.

The romance progressed swimmingly, according to Milan records, until the day Bruce shifted position, crayon in fingers, and bumped into an utter stranger who was chalking his own way around the waist from the opposite direction.

The Erratic Gale

SOMETIMES in Chicago it isn't even necessary to go into a restaurant if you insist upon changing headgear.

This will be understood, as well as the reason Chicago is called the Windy City when it is known what happened during the second Century of Progress to the visitor from Kalispell, Mont.

This gentleman strolled blithely through the fair when a gust of Lake Michigan wind lifted the wide-brimmed stetson from his head, slapped it twice against a flagpole and disappeared with it in the dusk.

The dismayed fair-goer almost swallowed his toothpick in his vexation. He had turned toward a nearby hat store to buy a new headpiece when there came a sudden swirl, another stetson dropped from out the sky and settled on his brow.

The second hat was of fine texture, in good condition, and fitted perfectly, all these details having been carefully attended to by the second errant breeze, which fortunately had decided to befriend the visitor.

As he related the experience that night in a Michigan avenue tavern he was approached by an entire stranger who smilingly returned the lost hat, and retrieved his own.

The second man, it seems, had brought three carloads of cattle to the stock yards. As he was marketing them, he, too, was selected by a playful breeze. The hat of each man had been whisked away to the head of the other, even though they were nine miles apart at the time.

Frozen Wells

Frozen wells are wells in which ice is found either with or without water. They occasionally occur both here and in Europe. A famous one in Brandon, Vt., was sunk through a mass of frozen ground 15 feet thick and formerly showed ice at 14 feet below the surface in the summer time. In most frozen wells the ice lasts until late summer and the temperature is above the freezing point.

YOUR kidneys are constantly filtering waste matter from the blood stream. But kidneys sometimes lag in their work—do not act as nature intended—fail to remove impurities that poison the system when retained.

—10—

"Really," she said helplessly, but he did not wait. He ran downstairs and out to the car. He started the motor, turned the car carefully, came to a halt again at the door, and Grandmother was there, her breath coming and going with excitement, the hat perched at a careful angle, a pair of gloves in her hands. Bryn lifted her gently and put her down in the car.

Bryn stopped the car at the gate. He pushed the button of the horn. A long melodious call rang out. Instantly Deborah appeared on the little balcony before her room. Bryn opened Grandmother's door, and the old lady leaned out. She waved her handkerchief at the girl.

"I'm going to town, dear," she cried in her thin old voice, and sank back again with a sigh. And Bryn smiled behind his hand at the expression of horrified incredulity that had come over Deborah's face, an expression which, fortunately, her grandmother could not see.

Bryn had finished all the important business which had brought him to town. He had been to the bank, had identified himself as the owner of the account transferred from San Francisco a few days ago, and had been bowed out obsequiously by the manager himself. He had been to the post-office and had posted Tubby's letter, as well as a terse one of his own to Holworthy. He had taken Deborah's letter to the lawyer from his pocket, looked at it, hesitated, and then with a smile had opened and read it. Not exactly a businesslike document, but clear and to the point. At the bottom a name was signed, and as he read it he received a severe shock.

"Deborah Mayne Brynildson."

Deborah Mayne Brynildson. Deborah was his wife. She had taken his name. She was conscious of her position, far more conscious than he was. Deborah Mayne Brynildson . . . somehow the fact that she bore his name hadn't occurred to him. Poor little Deborah. Perhaps she hated that name.

Grandmother was waiting in the car. She had been sitting there ever since Bryn had parked the car when they had reached town, her eyes wide and excited. From time to time he came back to her, two or three times followed by white-aproned clerks with their arms piled high with packages which they placed in the trunk at the rear of the long car.

"Now," he said, with a foot on the running board, "how would you like to come out and stroll down the street, Grandmother? Nothing shall happen to you. I promise."

She looked up, her eyes sparkling. For a second she looked astonishingly like Deborah. "I . . . I don't think I would be afraid, Stuart," she said haltingly.

Bryn came to a sudden decision. He took her hand lightly in its black glove. "Will you do me a tremendous favor?"

"Certainly, my boy."

"Do you mind calling me by the name I've always been called? If you can believe it, almost nobody has ever used the name Stuart. Could you bring yourself to call me Bryn? It's what my friends say, and I scarcely know myself by 'Stuart.'"

"It's very strange," she said thoughtfully. "I don't understand why you're called Bryn. But I don't mind using it. As a matter of fact . . . 'Bryn, Bryn,'" she repeated. "You know, my boy, it suits you, somehow. 'Stuart' doesn't. I always felt queer saying it. 'Bryn.'"

"Thank you, Grandmother. You know how it is. When you aren't accustomed to a name . . ."

He opened the door wider, and waited. She gave a little fluttering breath and emerged slowly from her long retreat. She stepped out into the world with a hesitating air; but as she took the arm he offered and crossed the curb, she drew herself up slightly, and became once more the shadow of an assured woman of the world.

Both together they saw the hat in the window. It was a small window, glitteringly clean, and the hat hung inside the window. It was a small window, of a tiny millinery shop at the end of the street.

On a pedestal in the center was one hat, a molded toque of gray velvet the exact shade of Grandmother's hair. Bryn felt her hand move on his arm. He looked at the hat, and then down at her face. He turned, slowly, without a word, and they went into the little shop.

"The hat in the window, please," he said. The girl put the soft gray toque on the silvered hair. Grandmother, startled, looked at herself in the glass, and then turned to Bryn. Her eyes were deep blue and shining; her cheeks were pink.

"We will take it," he told the girl, and handed her a bill.

"And now," he said happily, "now let's go shopping."

Grandmother was a little intoxicated. She made no protests whatever. She clung tightly to his arm and followed where he led, and Bryn enjoyed himself thoroughly. He bought her a long soft gray woollen coat. He took her to a florist's and bought her a bunch of purple, scented violets to pin on the new coat. He bought her five pairs of gray gloves and a gray suede purse to match. Grandmother, by the time they were through, was twenty years younger, and the pain in her heart had entirely disappeared.

They proceeded down the street toward the car. "I've got one or two more things to buy," he decided, and went into a confectioner's. Grandmother accompanied him and stood waiting.

"I want," he told the proprietor, "a very nice box of chocolates and a pound of your best tobacco and a good pipe."

The proprietor knew what was meant. The articles were selected and paid for. He placed Grandmother carefully in the seat and got in himself.

On the sidewalk in front of the car a small boy in clean faded blue overalls came slowly along with a very small dog on the end of a leash. The dog shone like silk in the late afternoon sun. It sniffed the sidewalk happily.

The boy's eye caught Bryn. He called out. "You don't want to buy a good dog, do you, mister? This here one's for sale. Two dollars."

"What is it, a cocker spaniel?" Bryn inquired, regarding the floppy ears, the water-waved coat, the thumping tail.

"Yessir, a real cocker. Ain't that a pretty color?"

"What's the matter with it?"

"Well," the boy told him, dropping his voice, "it's a lady dog. And," confidentially, "you know what they're like."

"Oh. A lady dog. What's her name?"

"Garbo." The boy grinned. "Just take a look at her." He made a little clucking noise with his tongue. Instantly the dog sat up, paws crossed limply before her, mouth closed, silky ears drooping, her eyes sad and mournful and pleading. Bryn looked. He began to laugh, silently.

"Well," Bryn decided, "she's sold. Here's your money."

CHAPTER V

Bryn, on the morning after his trip to town with Grandmother, paused in his systematic and careful examination of the grounds, leaned against a tree down at the lower corner, lit a cigarette, and considered.

The men who were coming out from town to make a garden out of this wilderness would have to work carefully. All through the thick grass were scattered rare shrubs, beds of flowering plants, plots of hyacinth and crocus bulbs, crescents of iris set into the corners.

But his main consideration was not directed toward the garden. He was remembering Deborah's face when they had returned yesterday, he and Grandmother. White and cold, she had met them in the doorway and led Grandmother into the small sitting room to rest for a moment before removing her new coat and hat. Deborah was no longer angry. While they were away she had obviously come to some agreement with herself; Bryn decided, as she smiled faintly and took the box of chocolates, as she put it down without a glance upon the small table beside her, that he preferred her angry. He had swung on his heel, leaving her there with Grandmother, and gone out to Gary. Gary stood in the drive, his parcel laid on the grass, watching the puppy rolling over and over, wild with excitement, and yelping with joy at her release from the car.

"Perhaps you'll tell Miss Deborah that the puppy is for her," Bryn said curtly, and went back up to his room.

But the puppy wasn't having any difficulty in penetrating these frosty layers and discovering the real Deborah. From his window yesterday afternoon Bryn had witnessed their first meeting. Deborah had come out to Gary, and at her appearance the puppy had rushed upon her with a ferocious threatening growl which ended precipitately as the little dog fell over her own feet and tumbled in a heap before Deborah's. Instantly, unquestioning as a child, she had bent to lift it in her arms. "Oh, Gary," she cried, "isn't it a darling? Isn't it a darling puppy?"

She hugged it close, and it snuggled for a moment comfortably under her chin. Then it put out a pink tongue and kissed Deborah entirely without reserve.

"You're a bad dog," she scolded, but her voice was soft and laughing and tender. Bryn drew a deep breath. When she spoke to him her voice wasn't like that. "Where did it come from, Gary?"

"She's for you, Miss Deborah. Mr. Bryn brought her out from town."

"Oh," Deborah said. "Of course. I might have known." But she did not drop the puppy. She stood silent, thinking.

"Now look, Miss Deborah," Gary began, "I don't think he means any harm, after all. He's only acting natural."

"Oh, hush!" Deborah cried stormily, stamping her foot. She held the puppy close and ran off with her, back of the house, down to some hidden nook of her own which always seemed to be her chosen place of refuge.

That had been yesterday.

Bryn went down and got into the car, standing on the drive. He drew from his pocket the worn piece of paper which . . . was it only yesterday morning? . . . had caused Deborah such woe.

His eyes traveled down the list on the paper in his hand. Magazines, catalogues, tea, servants. Gardeners, yes. The bank manager was sending them out as soon as he could find them.

Gary came out to him.

"I must say," he said to Bryn, "you got a way of getting things done. And . . . I'd like to thank you for that tobacco, sir."

"I suppose the electric light situation is next," Bryn said, unheeding. "Well, I think I can fix that myself. Several years of engineering ought to prove of some value. Lead on, Gary."

A Michigan mother exchanges a week-old child for some house furnishings and then repents of her bargain. Although even dumb creatures will not part with their newly-born offspring, there may have been some excuse for the sale, since by means of it the child passed from extreme poverty to comfort. Comment is not directed at this place to the wisdom of the transaction or to a well known instinct of animals but to the strange circumstance that the authorities state that there is nothing in the law to forbid such a deal.

These products come into direct competition in the United States with American farmers, and in the case of pork and cotton, drastic reductions have been made in American production under the New Deal agricultural policies.

LEGION TO SPONSOR VALLEY FESTIVAL

At the call of the Legion Post for a meeting last Friday night, to determine the feasibility of a fall festival in the St. Joe Valley, a fair crowd met at the Legion hall and expressed themselves as favorable to such a move and the dates were chosen as September 4-5-6.

As plans are unfolded within the next few weeks for a Fall Festival here, the cooperation and effort of every merchant and business man in the community will be essential, as well as the assistance of every civic, patriotic, fraternal and religious organization.

Events of this kind serve to promote the growth of a community and attract the attentaion of other communities. The Legion also feels the necessity of making it a worth while event and perhaps to make it an annual affair and in so doing again incorporate the idea of a community home-coming.

Just what the complete program of festivity will consist of is not definitely known, but whatever it is every citizen and resident should do his or her best to complete it. If you are asked to do some particular task, you will be asked because others think you are capable of doing it. You can prove your own capability best by the actual results of your efforts.

Individual effort in affairs of this kind, working toward one objective is the real basis of cooperation.

A historical pageant was proposed for one evening and the following committee was chosen to head this: J. R. Leivhty, Esther Bowman, Leon Kees, Mary Krise, Walter Baker, Clyde Hart, Mrs. Ida Traxler, Mrs. Roscoe Walter and John Woodcox.

Parade Committee: Roy Maxwell, J. R. Leighty, Clyde Hart, Ed Storer and Dr. C. R. Baumgartner.

Saturday Night Committee: Clark Scholes, Paul Perry and Vernie Monroe.

Home Coming and Sunday Observance Committee: Mrs. Grace Dilley, Mrs. Arline Koch, A. M. Baker, Mrs. Laura Washler, Mrs. Burl Enzor, John Koch, Stanley Means, Hattie Draggoo, and J. N. Scholes.

Advertising Committee: Chas. Bassett, Harvey Hull and F. B. Leighty.

Concessions and Rides: Clayton Chorpenning, Roy Reidenbach and Leon Kees.

The next meeting of all committees will be held Thursday night, this week, at Legion hall.

YOUTHS SENTENCED ON ASSAULT CHARGE

Two Ohio youths, Farrell Wanderly, 19, of Bryan, and Paul Coy, 21, of Farmer, were sentenced to the Indiana state farm last week by Judge Endicott for assault and battery. Coy must serve ninety days and Wanderly sixty days.

The youths were arrested June 20 after Chas. High, an elderly Spencerville man, was found on the sidewalk at his home, unconscious. His jaw had been fractured and the upper part of his body was black and blue from blows he had received. He was placed in the Dr. Bonnell Sauder hospital in Auburn and recently was able to return home.

Wanderly and Coy claimed they did not know when they attacked High that he was an old man. They were attending a dance at Spencerville and went to High's back yard, where High says they were committing a nuisance. He squirted water on them and the attack followed. After they struck and beat him they dragged him to the sidewalk.

The youths insisted they had had nothing to drink. They had been in jail ever since they were arrested. High's hospital and doctor bills amount to nearly $100 and the court said the youths should pay this expense. However, they were unable to do so at this time. The court also assessed fines of $1 and costs each. Judge Endicott told the defendants they were lucky they were not in court for murder.

Capt. H. C. Springer appeared for the defendants, while Geo. E. Mountz, prosecuting attorney, represented the state.

THE CHEERFUL CHERUB

I picked a lot of flower buds.
How soon they met their doom!
It must be fierce to be a bud
And never get to bloom.

A Lesson in Loyalty

When a dog experiences that transition we konw by the stark name of death it affects us the more poignantly because he goes over the horizon with such magnificent valor.

I have had my heart wrenched many times by a close-up of this extraordinary courage. Invariably dogs meet what mankind regards as the terror of terrors with a beautiful complacency, an instinct, if you will, that should hearten us all for a journey that is inevitable.

Dogs have taught those of us who love them many excellent things. Foremost, perhaps, is the divine quality, loyalty. They have also taught the art of forgiveness and forthright honesty.

So it does not seem at all strange to me that they should help us to banish fear of the last enemy. I had a dog whose obedience to my command sent him to death under a careening joyrider's wheels. He crawled back to me, licked my hand as though to say, "I don't blame you!" and stiffened in death.—O. O. McIntyre in Cosmopolitan.

WHAT FOODS TO BAR FROM DIET

Consider Those Affected by Certain Articles.

By EDITH M. BARBER

AT THE present moment, general rules for good nutrition are well established for the normal person. Every once in a while, however, you find a personal idiosyncrasy for one or more foods which demands that they be excluded temporarily or permanently from the diet.

There are a number of persons who are what is known as sensitive to certain foods and when they take them, even in small amounts, allergic conditions may be developed. The symptoms are hives, and nasal disturbances which are not unlike hay fever which is also caused by sensitiveness, in this case, to pollen.

A number of children are born with a sensitivity to such foods as eggs, whole grains and wheat and sometimes to beans and peas. There is an occasional reaction to milk. These conditions can be overcome in general by giving minute quantities at first and gradually increasings the amounts. It is quite common to find that strawberries and shellfish cause reactions. Sometimes this fact will be undiscovered until it shows after a nervous strain or disease. Often skin tests will show what food has suddenly become responsible for hives or a chronic cold. Usually the sensitivity clears up after other conditions are improved.

If there is a chronic condition which has been found impossible to correct, foods which are responsible must be replaced by others which will provide the same type of nourishment. If one member of the family is allergic, the meals for the family should be planned as far as possible with this consideration in mind.

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

BLANKETS, both heavy and light weight, are needed in mountain resorts, the former especially in northern camps, and in some shore places, where occupants come early in the season and remain late. Woolen blankets are warmest, although now cotton ones are given a wool-like texture. However, the wool are warmest because this is the inherent nature of the material. For blankets of less warmth, cotton ones are especially well-adapted to summer needs. A homemaker who sees that a summer place is suitably and inexpensively furnished, saves the old blankets from the winter home for the summer place. The weight of partially worn ones is good for this use.

A homemaker who enjoys knitting or crocheting can make beautiful warm and light-weight covers with crochet hook or knitting needles. These blankets or throws, as they are also called, are rapidly worked with very large needles and heavy wool yarn (the weight of Germantown worsted), three-ply. Plain knitting stitch is used or double or treble crochet stitch, according to the craft.

Knitting Directions.

For a knit blanket 1¾ yards square, cast 135 stitches on long, large wooden needles. Knit 100 ribs. Bind off. Line with China silk or any light weight material preferred. Bind lining and knitted edges together with straight 2½-inch wide strips of the lining material, or with satin ribbon 2 inches wide. The latter is recommended for durability, which spells saving. A good grade of silk muslin can be used for lining instead of the China silk. Self-tone blankets are daintiest, a pale pink, blue, or any color to suit the room may be used. Owing to the loose mesh, knit and crochet blankets require lining.

In working the crochet blanket, 4 stitches to the inch is recommended. Stitchery should be very loose. If triple crochet is used, and tension is loose the same number of rows as in the knit blanket should be approximately the same in crochet. However by making more or less rows the length can be whatever the worker wishes, but not less than 1¾ yards. Crocheted blankets are bound and lined as are the knit ones. Either type of throws are delightfully light and sufficiently warm.

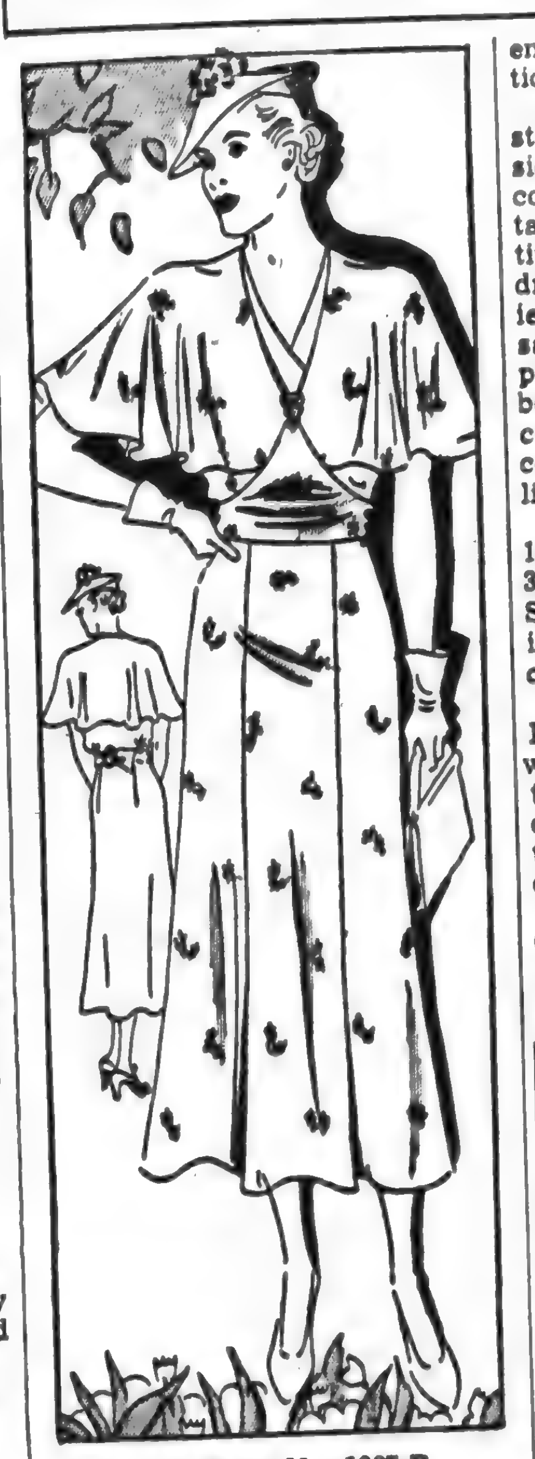
The knit or crocheted blanket is light weight and warm and may be used on bed for a throw. (A) Note binding about blanket.

Matron's Dress with Vestee



Pattern No. 1907-B

This dress designed with soft capelet sleeves and a contrasting vestee is one of those perennial styles. It is always a pleasure to show by popular request. They're so universally becoming to larger and more mature women, and so adaptable to conventional occasions.

The model shown is a clever street frock which takes into consideration the fitting problem encountered by many women whose tastes incline toward conservative rather than complicated dressmaking. The lines are studied to give slenderness without sacrificing a trim and neat appearance, exemplified in the beautiful pointed up bodice, especially graceful and smart. Sheer cotton, prints and chiffons are delightful for town or country.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1907-B is available for sizes: 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, 46, 48 and 50. Size 36 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Labor and Wait

IT IS easy to make a spurt, but hard to keep pegging away. Confucius taught the Chinese this lesson by a parable: "If I am building a mountain," said he, "and stop before the last basket of earth is put on top of my work, I have failed; but if I have placed the smallest basketful on the ground, and go on, I am really building a mountain." Like the soldiers of Nehemiah at the building of the wall of Jerusalem that "held the spears from the rising of the morning till the stars appeared"; so let us labor and wait, if necessary, until the stars appear.

All Around the House

When making pastry use only enough water to hold ingredients together. Mix quickly, roll and handle as little as possible if you wish pastry to be flaky.

• • •

A cup of peanut butter mixed with half a cup of mayonnaise and one finely chopped raw onion makes a good sandwich spread.

• • •

Lingerie must be tinted occasionally to preserve its dainty appearance. A faded blue garment will tint a delicate orchid with the aid of a pink dye, a pale yellow will shade into a delicate green if dipped in blue dye and a pink dye will change the yellow to a shell pink. Be sure to use small quantities of the dye for these pastel shades.

• • •

The fat side of beef should be placed nearest the flame when roasting. The melting fat will flavor and baste the meat during the cooking.

• • •

Oil or oily substances should never be used on waxed floors. They soften the wax, sink into wood and eventually darken it.

• • •

A pinch of baking soda added to the water in which a fowl is cooked will make it more tender.

• • •

Cloths saturated with polishing liquids if stored away in a closet often cause spontaneous combustion. Keep these cloths in a covered tin container.

• • •

Use the purest of cider vinegar for pickles and pickled preserves. Do not mix two different kinds of vinegar.

THERE is a reason why Louis Meyer won the 500-mile Indianapolis race this year—and why he is the only man ever to win this gruelling race three times. He always used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, and never experienced tire trouble of any kind.

Louis Meyer knows tire construction. He also knows that to drive for 500 consecutive miles over this hot brick track, negotiating the dangerous curves 800 times at the record-breaking average speed of 109 miles an hour, requires tires of super strength and greatest blowout protection, as a blowout on any one of the dangerous curves would likely mean instant death. By the Firestone patented Gum-Dipping process every cord in the tires on Louis Meyer's car was soaked and coated with liquid rubber, thereby preventing internal friction and heat. This is the secret of the extra strength and reserve safety built into Firestone Tires.

You of course will not drive 109 miles per hour, but at today's higher speeds you do need tires that will give you greatest blowout protection and will stop your car up to 25% quicker. Take no chances! Let your Firestone Auto Supply and Service Store or Firestone Dealer equip your car with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires, the safest tires built. It costs so little to protect lives worth so much!

Regrets Should Deter

All regrets are "vain" if they do not act as deterrents on future occasions.

Keep your promises and discharge your obligations.

You may have a good-natured neighbor and be unable to determine whether it is laziness or a kind heart. Both, maybe.

"Don't worry" is a good rule to offer others; but, like all advice, they are unable to fol'ow it.

Indulgent Dad

Son, Father can always tell you something for your own good if he will speak the whole truth to you. Often he hesitates to hurt your feelings.

The man who always speaks the truth is sure to have other virtues.

A boost when needed is better than a pull that isn't.

There are gifted women who, perceiving how much the man who loves them has idealized them, succeed in living up to his ideal. Two happy souls!

Are We Overcharged?

Even our pleasures cost more than they used to. Many a fellow's idea of a good time is to pay a $50 fine for 50 cents' worth of fun.

As soon as a man begins to love his work, then will he also begin to make progress.

Making a collection of books is at least as justifiable as making a collection of anything else.

What ailed the clothing of the ancients more important than a rur in the stocking of the moderns?

CHAPTER VI

—12—

Deborah walked slowly back to the house. The shadows were beginning to lengthen; the sun was already dropping down toward the western hills. In the garden the men had turned on the spray of the new watering system that had been installed, and the water spread up in a wide jewelled fan against the orchard green.

From the road outside the wall came the steady hum of an approaching motor. The motor slowed. The gate was open; the car turned in and came cautiously up the drive not with its usual swift rush to the house.

It was Mr. Forbes.

"Here I am," he said cheerfully. "Don't say you don't remember me!"

"Of course I remember you," Deborah said, smiling. "It's only a little more than two weeks."

He took her outstretched hand. He smiled down at her, the warmest and most comfortable kind of smile. "Where's Bryn?" His eyes searched her face, and she flushed faintly as she answered.

"He's gone to town. You must have passed him there."

"Well, he'll come back," Tubby said with assurance, and turned to the man who had come with him, still sitting in the car. "It's the place, all right," he said, and the man began to climb out. Tubby turned back to Deborah. "I've brought the new butler."

"Oh." Deborah's eyes flickered over the grave and dignified mien of the new butler. She nodded to him. "I'll call Gary," she decided, turned, stepped inside the kitchen and called out "Gary! Oh, Gar-eee!"

In a moment he came, puffing, red faced, his coat only half on. He was fumbling for the sleeve. "Never mind your coat," Deborah told him, and took it away from him. "This is Gary, Mr. Forbes," she told Tubby. "Mr. Forbes is . . . is Bryn's best friend," she informed Gary. "He has brought us a butler. You will take care of him, Gary, and Mr. Forbes, too, I must run and tell Grandmother." She smiled again at Tubby. "She will be wondering."

"Who was that, dear?" Grandmother inquired as Deborah reached the foot of the steps. "Not gardeners, surely. They seem quite different."

"It's . . . a Mr. Forbes, Grandmother. I told you about him. He was at my wedding. Bryn calls him Tubby. Because he is so pink and plump, I suppose. And the man with him is the new butler. Gary is taking care of them."

Grandmother sighed contentedly. "I can scarcely believe it," she murmured.

Footsteps sounded in the hall inside the open door, and Tubby appeared in the doorway. He hesitated, and Deborah went to his side.

"Grandmother, this is Mr. Forbes," she murmured, and Tubby crossed the porch to bend over the wrinkled hand held out to him. He looked very nice indeed in a suit of gray-blue, a perfectly tailored suit.

"I am so glad you have come," Grandmother was saying. She settled herself again into her pillows and drew the thin Paisley smooth over her knees. "I have suggested to Bryn any number of times that we might have some of his friends come and visit us, but as yet we have been so busy putting the house and ourselves in order."

Tubby was frankly staring at her. "Do you call him Bryn, now?" he inquired.

"Yes. He explained it to me, and asked me if I minded. Of course I did not mind. I have become very fond of him, even in this short time. It doesn't matter what he is called. You have known him a long time, Mr. Forbes?"

"Yes," Tubby was beginning, comfortably. He settled down in his chair.

A stately figure appeared in the doorway. It was the butler, bland and serene, with a small silver tray holding a bell. He looked at Tubby and waited.

"Oh," Tubby said. "Mrs. Larned, this is Burch. I think he will be able to make you comfortable."

"How do you do, Burch," Grandmother said gently. Burch bowed, and murmured an acknowledgment of the introduction. He advanced slowly and put the bell down on the small table at Grandmother's side. His movements were quietly majestic. He began to withdraw.

"Hi," Tubby called after him. "Bring me my bag, will you, Burch?"

"Yes, sir."

In a few moments he returned with a heavy pigskin bag which he set down before Tubby on the porch. He went away again. Tubby fumbled in his pocket for a key ring. He opened the bag. He looked at Deborah.

"I've brought you some wedding presents," he said with his fascinating lisp. "There wasn't time to tell anyone before you left San Francisco. Bryn made me promise I wouldn't tell, anyway, as if it could have been kept quiet. The city is buzzing."

"Oh, dear," Deborah said faintly.

Nobody heard her. Grandmother was looking very proud. "His is a very old family, of course," she said. "Even in San Francisco the wedding was certain to be a matter of comment. Nobody there will remember us, but I am pleased to think that Bryn is well known."

Tubby drew forth a tissue-wrapped box. "This is from my sister Sally," he explained, handing it to Deborah.

Deborah unwrapped the tissue paper. Inside was a long velvet jeweler's box; she opened it, and there, in the white velvet lining, lay a whole suite of rose-colored crystals, exquisitely cut. The long strand of the necklace dropped to her waist; the earrings were pendant on silver chains; there were two sparkling bracelets and a beautiful ring. Deborah looked at them.

"Is your sister Sally . . . is she a very great friend of Bryn's too?"

"Yes, indeed. They've adored each other for years. When Sally and Simon used to quarrel, it was always Bryn that Sally went to for sympathy. He'd let her cry it out on his shoulder, and pat her—you know, the way men do," Tubby said to Grandmother with camaraderie . . . "and then he would slip off and telephone Simon, give him a good wigging, and tell him where Sally was. . . . I don't think they'd ever have got through at all if it hadn't been for Bryn."

"Who is Simon?" Deborah heard herself saying.

"Simon? Oh, he's Sally's husband. They're crazy about each other, you know, and always were, but they did quarrel until they were married. Now, here," Tubby went on, rummaging with one hand and holding out a flat round parcel with the other. "This is from me. It's the only way you'd ever get it. I thought you'd appreciate it," he muttered, his head in the bag.

"All the Girls Are Crazy About Bryn."

Deborah unwrapped the parcel silently. Inside, looking out from a beautiful heavy silver frame, was Bryn's face. The gray eyes twinkled up at her; the mouth was firm and quiet. She looked at it. She handed it across to Grandmother. "You will like this," she said.

Grandmother took it and held it silently before her. After a moment Deborah saw her fumbling for her handkerchief. She wiped her eyes, surreptitiously. She loved him. She loved him as much as that.

"There," Tubby said, lifting a fiery red face. "There, right at the very bottom, of course. Now this is from Madeline."

It was a most exquisite rose-colored silk shawl covered with pale-blue embroidered flowers in small perfect stitches, and a long pale blue fringe. "It's to match the crystals," Tubby explained, quite unnecessarily. Deborah's hand caressed the heavy silk. "I love it," she told him gently. "Is Madeline your sister too?"

"Well, no," Tubby said, with what seemed to her a hint of embarrassment. "Not exactly. She's Simon's sister, so of course she's practically in the family. She's an extremely nice girl."

"Has she been a friend of Bryn's all his life, too?"

"Well, yes. Practically."

"Do they . . ." Deborah stopped. Her violet eyes were fixed on his face. She waited.

Tubby coughed. "You know how it is," he explained with a wave of his hand. "All the girls are crazy about Bryn. Always were. They're bound to be a little upset to think he's married now and gone."

"Is Madeline upset?"

Tubby laughed heartily. "Oh, I don't think so," he said. "She's too sensible for that."

"I see," Deborah said quietly.

Grandmother looked up from the shawl and lifted the picture again. "Would it be possible to have another copy made of this?" she inquired.

"I'm sure I can get any number," Tubby said at once. "They're Bryn's graduation pictures. He's wearing the gown and hood there. I can get 'em from the photographer in Palo Alto."

"Palo Alto?"

"That's where Bryn graduated, of course, at Stanford."

"Stanford?" Grandmother repeated, with wrinkled brows. "Isn't that rather strange?"

Tall Tales

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ESCAPE IN SIBERIA

SIR HORACE PLUNKETT of England, or "Hod" Plunkett as the cowboys in western Nebraska and eastern Wyoming in the early days knew him, had some thrilling adventures on the American frontier, but his narrowest escape from death was in Siberia.

One day his horse went lame near a Russian village. Being in a hurry to reach St. Petersburg, he left his horse there and hired another one, hitched to a sleigh. In the midst of a dark, dismal forest, he heard a howl and saw a huge timber wolf pursuing him.

Sir Horace lashed his horse into a mad gallop, but the wolf gained on him at every jump. Just as the fierce beast sprang at him, Sir Horace dropped down into the bottom of the sleigh. The wolf shot clear over him and lighted on the horse's hindquarters.

The terrified horse kept on running even after it was half eaten up. Then Sir Horace sprang up. His whip gave the wolf a terrific cut. With a howl the beast sprang forward just as the horse died and fell out of the harness which dropped on the wolf.

Sir Horace then grabbed up the reins. By lashing at the wolf constantly with his whip he kept it going forward at a terrific pace. A few moments later it raced into a town and came to a plunging halt in front of an inn. Out dashed a group of Russians who killed the wolf and, as Sir Horace stepped out of the sleigh, pressed forward to congratulate him upon his escape.

THE HUMILIATED TEETH

IN SALT LAKE CITY, baseball bugs still refer to Joe Jenkins, their old catcher, as the man who always wore a mask, not because Joe used a mask when catching, but the contraption he wore other times was a little net slung under his chin. It acted as catcher, too—whenever Joe's lower plate of 16 shiny, false teeth, worked loose.

Without dreaming of being insulting, Joe laid the plate aside in a restaurant one night and went right on eating. It happened the teeth were on edge; they were so humiliated by his act they rolled to the floor and hid there.

Next day, filled with remorse, the teeth began to hunt Joe. It was a long search, filled with heart breaks. Once the teeth almost caught up with Joe while he was gulping milk toast, missing by snapping distance only.

One afternoon, Salt Lake opposed the Portland Beavers. The Utah team was three runs behind, ninth inning, two out and the bases filled. Joe'd been in an awful slump and was benched.

At this moment, fortunately for Salt Lake, something resembling a wide smile crawled up the players' bench and bit Jenkins where he carried his eating tobacco. Whooping wildly, Joe leaped seven feet in the air. With his right hand he snapped the prodigal lower plate into his mouth; with the left he reached down for his bat. Joe slammed a home run over the left field fence, winning the game for Salt Lake by a score of 6 to 5.

A RESOURCEFUL COCK

"THE picture in my living room," said Humming Bird Stevenson of Columbia, Tenn., "is not a reproduction of a freak of nature but a lifelike portrait of Blinky, my one-eyed rooster.

"That smear on the right side of his head is a glass eye. I know it's bloodshot. I painted it that way to make the other cocks overconfident. His neck is a trifle corkscrewish—that's because Blinky, in feinting to overcome the handicap of a single eye, almost wrung his own neck.

"The greatest pitting he won was when a couple of city fellows came to Columbia with their fighting birds and cleaned up.

"In the grand finale, Blinky was matched against the city champion, an Allen round-head, and I bet all I could beg, borrow or steal at odds of 5 to 1. The odds were easy to get, for word was passed to the city slickers that poor Blinky was a one-eyed cock.

"Blinky never showed better pitmanship. Wherever the round-head struck my pride sideslipped and put his glass eye in front of the gaffs. After that the round-head's needles were too dull to mend a pair of open-work stockings and the match was in the bag."

Home of Seabirds

Venice has been called the "Queen of the Adriatic" and the "Serene Seaport," but its oldest name was the "Sea-Birds' Home." Long before the Huns swept down on Italy there was a small population, the aboriginal Venetians, occupying the estuary, of whom Cassiodorus, secretary of Theodoric the Great, has left us a picture. The Huns drove refugees from Padua, Aquileia and other mainland cities to the lagoons to found a republic among the sea birds.

REPORT OF DEKALB CO. RED CROSS NURSING SERVICE FROM DEC. 15, 1935 TO JUNE 1, 1936

At an Executive Committee meeting of the DeKalb County Red Cross Chapter in December, 1935, it was decided to recommence the Red Cross Public Health Nursing Service on Dec. 15th in the schools of DeKalb county, and that other activities were to be carried on as they might develop.

She talked to 23 groups of school children and to a Parent Teachers Association meeting at the Harrison school. To demonstrate part of her talk she used a model of the teeth of a 6 year old child. The nurse distributed in the schools during the first 3 weeks in May, over 1000 booklets on dental care written in a story form, sent to her through Dr. Westfall. Over 100 dental corrections were made in the Harrison school, Auburn, 16 of these were taken by the nurse to the dentist and the cost financed by a student fund handled by the Harrison Parent Teacher Association, 6 pupils of the DeSoto school were also taken to a dentist and the cost financed by the DeSoto Parent Teachers Association.

The Public Debt Is the People's Burden

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

America, according to latest statistics, is now staggering under a collection of governmental debts—federal, state and local—which reach an all-time high of over Fifty-three Billion Dollars.

This total is called the Public Debt. But a clearer name might be the People's Debt, or better still, the People's Burden. For whether they realize it or not, it's the people who must pay—not only the workers and earners of the present generation, but those of generations to come.

And it's a heavy bill that the politicians are running up for you and your descendants. It means that no matter how carefully you've conducted your affairs, no matter how you and your family have sacrificed to make ends meet, you're in debt to the amount of $415. That, say the statisticians, is the per capita share.

It means, further, that if you head a family of say five members, your family's share of the debt runs over $2,000. If the family is larger, so is its ultimate burden.

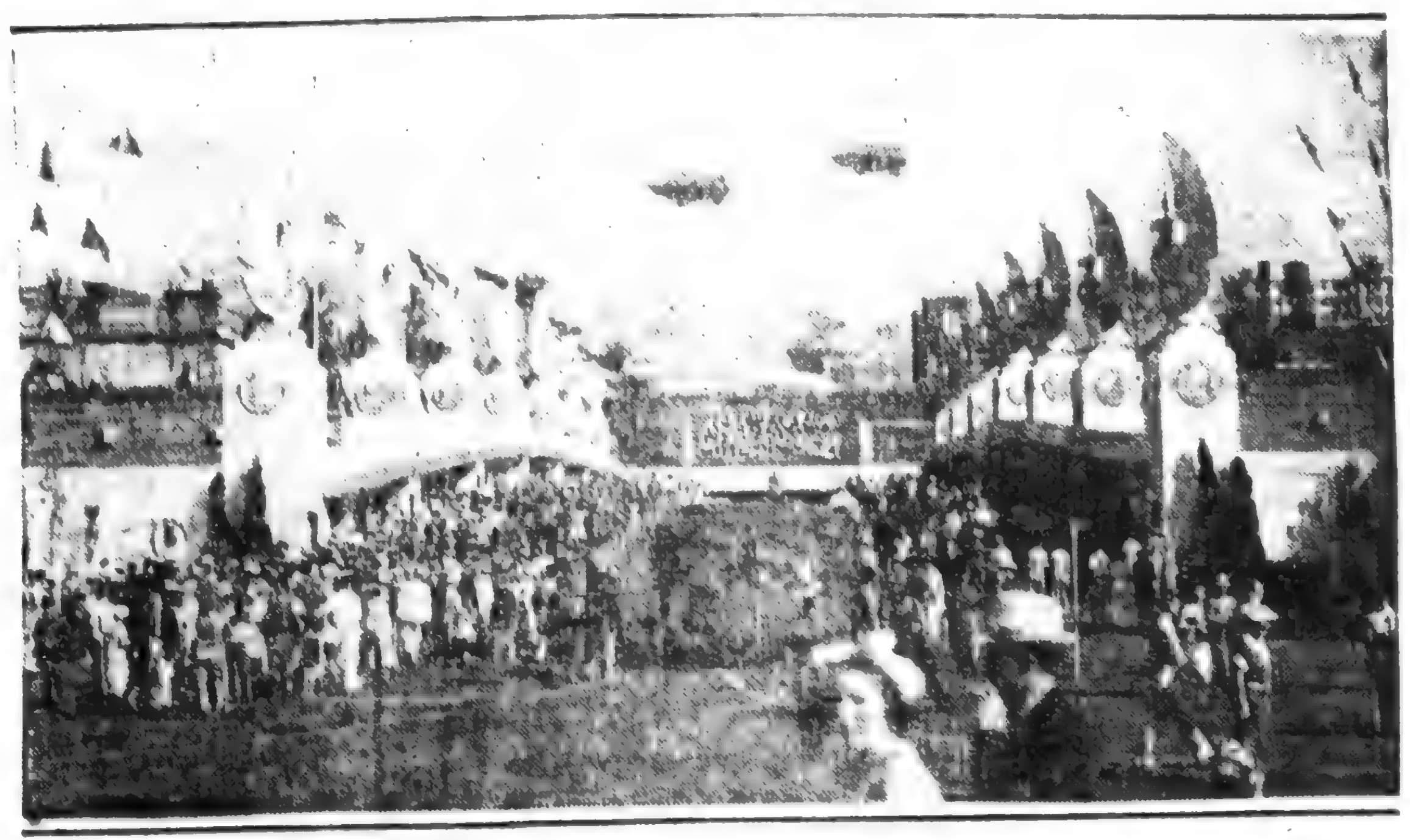
Just who plunged us all so deeply into the red?

The statisticians have analyzed that, too. They point out that Thirty-four Billion Dollars of the debt—approximately $264 per capita—was piled up by the Federal Government; while more than Nineteen Billions—approximately $151 per capita—was loaded on the people by state and local governments; or, to be more accurate, by the office-holders who hold the reins of government.

It must be pleasant for office-holding politicians to feel that they've been so generous. It's always pleasant to be generous with other people's money. That's a bright side of the picture.

But there's a dark side, too! It's reserved for the public—for the workers and housewives of America—who now pay and will continue to pay for the politicians' generosity, not only in higher taxes, but in increased costs for virtually everything they buy.

Crowds Pour Into Exposition Grounds



Every day is a busy day at the Great Lakes Exposition in Cleveland and this picture shows the crowds pouring across the Court of Presidents into the compact grounds of the Exposition. The grounds cover 150 acres lying along the cool shores of Lake Erie. Overhead are two of the blimps which take passengers for trips over the grounds and the city.

Make it your business to read the classified ad column each week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ole Braybrook were Sunday guests of Herman Kessler and wife.

Carl Akins, who is working with the B. & O steel gang near Defiance, was injured last week, when a piece of steel struck him in the leg and punctured about two inches. He is unable to work as yet.

Having just received a bill from his tailor dated July, 1929, and marked, "Please remit by return. 51st notice," Bill Stoney replied: "Dear Sir: I do not remember ordering a suit such as you mention. If I did order it, you certainly never made it for me. If you did make it for me, I never got it. Furthermore, if I got it, I must have paid for it. And if I didn't, I can't."

Ten DeKalb county students have been granted admission cards and will enter Indiana University for the first time in September. They are John Kooken, Garrett; James Booher, Albany; Betty Jane White, Butler; Lewis Steward and Margaret Walter, Spencerville; Gilbert Shull, Dorothy McClintock, Mary Ann Krise, Violetta Brunson and Joan Hoff, all of Auburn.

Paulding county will have no fair this year. Such was the announcement given out last week. And it strikes a real blow to every person within the boundaries of the county. For more than half a century it has been the one real gathering place for the people. Lack of funds is the cause. The county agent, nurse doctor and other fees are to be discontinued in the interest of economy.

Mrs. Glen Cole and father, B. E. Widney entertained last Saturday in honor of their house guests, Mrs. Nettie Baker, of Fort Wayne and Mrs. Maude Bishop, of Cleveland, the following persons: Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kees, Mrs. Jennie Sechler, DeLora Curtis, Arline Koch and Belle Woodcox. A fine chicken dinner with all the accessories was served at the noon hour by the hostess.

The WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONAL

by MAX BERNS

People Control Congress

How and why does our Constitution limit the powers of Congress?

In most countries, the form of government is established by the government and is alterable by the government. The law-making branch has supreme power not only to make laws but also to change the form of government. The only guard against despotism is in periodic elections.

In our country, "we the people," through our Constitution, establish our form of government and make it alterable, not by the government but only by the people. Our Congress has power to pass only such laws as specified in our Constitution and no power whatever to change our Constitution—our form of government.

In addition to these safeguards, Article I of our Constitution specifies that Congressmen shall be elected every two years and Senators every six years.

We guard against a legislative despotism by limiting the powers of Congress, by specifying the terms of its members and by making our Constitution paramount to the government itself. These specifications can be and have been changed (amended), not by Congress but only by the people.

New York Women Shun Tammanyized Democracy

Chicago.—"Women are beginning to understand that under the New Deal this is a government for the people, of the people and BUY the people," said Mrs. Henry R. Carraway of New York, president of the Women's National Republican club. She added that New York women "are seething with zeal over the Republican ticket."

"Women want to get away from the Tammany influence," she continued. "They cannot see the distinction between the Farley organization and Tammany in New York, since here Farley controls every federal job just as Tammany controls every city job in New York city."

Robert Quance returned to his home in Auburn Wednesday after a week's visit in the O. E. Ginther home.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Keesler and Mrs. Doris Yeiser and children visited Mrs. Jane Coburn and sons Sunday afternoon.

Checks totalling $4,297,000 have been mailed to schools of the state in the semi-annual distribution of teachers' salary funds made available by the gross income tax, according to an announcement. Schools of DeKalb county, with 171 teaching units received $36,337.50. The largest sum went to Marion county, which received $453,475. Included in this amount was $373,787.50 for Indianapolis, the largest single school unit in the state.

Exposition Proving Mecca to Traveling America

Visitors to the Great Lakes Exposition on Cleveland's lake front are enthusiastic about the way the original purpose of the Exposition—the demonstration of the industries which have made the prosperity of the Great Lakes Basin—has been carried out. It is a graphic picture of the reasons for the country's wealth.

These visitors to date have numbered nearly one million persons and each day the industrial and commercial exhibits are attracting increasing attention.

Iron and steel are recognized as the basis of the industry of the manufacturing centers of the middle west, and the great producers of iron and steel have combined, in intensely interesting exhibits, to show not only the extent to which manufacturing processes have been carried but also to demonstrate in striking fashion the historical beginnings of the industry. From a graphic portrayal of the production and shipment of the ore, coal and limestone used in blast furnaces and steel mills to moving models of giant machines of manufacture, the exposition visitor is able to study the industry to a point where books could not take him.

There are also interesting exhibits of many articles of manufacture, from machine tools and steel house frames to office and household equipment. Various lines of food products are shown, and there are automobiles, farm tractors, heating and air conditioning units, printing presses and almost everything which helps to make up the equipment for modern living.

But the big exposition is not entirely a school, even though the lessons it teaches are of vital interest to the many thousands who pass through the grounds each day. The location, on the shores of Lake Erie, makes a perfect setting for a playground, and there have been provided many amusements including the marine theater with aquatic acts, a most unusual horticultural display, the Streets of the World with an unusually beautiful grouping of Old World architecture and displays, and a midway with many striking attractions. Over it all the Goodyear dirigibles come and go, giving passengers a wonderful view of the grounds and the business section of Cleveland and lending their touch of the modern to the Exposition picture.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, JULY 30, 1936 NUMBER 31

Reading His Speech

This hitherto unpublished picture of Governor Alf M. Landon was taken at his desk in Topeka, Kas., as he was making the final revision of his speech of acceptance.

HEAVY LOSS BY FIRE THURSDAY MORNING

Fire destroyed the barn and other buildings on the farm of Ellery Brace, one mile south and three miles east of Spencerville at 2:00 o'clock Thursday morning. The loss was estimated at between $6,000 and $7,000, with only a small amount of insurance.

The farm is located just across the DeKalb-Allen county line from Newville township. The fire apparently started in a large bank barn, 30x60 feet and spread to the straw stack. Mr. Brace's son was awakened by the flames leaping from the barn, and he arose, endeavoring to remove an automobile, but the fire was too hot. He called members of the family and fire departments from Hicksville, O., Grabill and St. Joe were summoned.

The fire spread to the granary and garage, the machine shed and poultry house. All of the hay, five hundred bushels of wheat just thresher, two hundred bushels of old corn, oats, two automobiles and all of the farm machinery were destroyed.

The fire jumped across the county line into Newville township and about twenty-five acres of field were burned over. Neighbors with wet sacks beat out the fire in the fields and kept it from spreading.

The conflagration was one of the most spectacular in the community in years and attracted nearly a thousand people from the section of the county adjacent to it.

Card of Appreciation

We take this means of expressing our thanks and appreciation to neighbors and friends and the St. Joe, Grabill and Hicksville fire departments for their aid in fighting the fire at our home and in adjoining fields.

Mr. and Mrs. Ellery Brace & Son.

OPENS FHA OFFICE AT AUBURN

E. O. Little, of Auburn, who has been connected with the Federal Housing Administration as field representative in this territory for the past 18 months, has opened an office in his jewelry store at Auburn for the purpose of advising and assisting borrowers and lenders to get together in financing mortgage loans under the Federal Housing plan. Mr. Little's services will consist of making out applications, compiling information and attend to all details required of the borrower and the securing of banking connections where the loan may be obtained. This service should appeal to persons desiring to build, or purchase a home or refinance an existing mortgage.

Borrowers are eligible, under the FHA plan, to borrow up to 80% of the appraised value of their property. Loans may be made for any number of years up to 20 and for any amount up to $16,000.00. The interest rate is 5% figured on declining balances. Monthly payments are required which reduce both interest and principle each month. Roughly the amount of the monthly payments is about one percent of the loan and such payments include taxes, fire and tornado insurance and other fixed charges. In most cases, the payments do not exceed the amount paid for rent for the type of property occupied. Mr. Little will be glad to consult with persons interested in mortgage financing of residential property.

Attractive Shelter House at Pokagon State Park In Ideal Setting for the Family Picnic

This attractive shelter house at Pokagon state park, on U. S. 27, five miles north of Angola, is an ideal place for the family picnic and has been one of the most popular of the improvements completed in the park. On a high, wooded bluff overlooking Lake James, the shelter is close to the bathing beach and the picnic and camping areas.

Pokagon state park, named for the Indian chieftain who once ruled over the northeastern part of Indiana, has an area of nearly a thousand acres and borders on Lake James and Snow Lake, both of which are known for their fine fishing. Bathing beaches, boating, hiking, horseback riding, and nature study are among the outdoor sports which may be enjoyed by the visitors. Buffalo, deer and elk are kept in tightly-fenced corrals and game fish are propagated in a series of hatchery ponds, additional places of interest. During the winter months, skating, iceboating, and other sports are enjoyed. Pokagon camp for boys is located in a secluded part of the park.

The shelter house pictured above and many of the other improvements in the park are the work of the Civilian Conservation Corps, a company of which is established in the park.

Hotel facilities are available at Potawatomi Inn which overlooks the lake.

SUMMER RECIPES CALLING FOR USE OF FRESH FRUITS

Now that summer days are at hand, the alert woman is interested in successful recipes calling for the use of fresh fruits. Here are three that have been thoroughly tested:

Fresh Fruit Pies

For rhubarb, plum, grape, strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, blueberry or huckleberry pie:

Combine 3½ cups prepared fruit, 1½ to 2½ tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca, and 1 to 1¼ cups sugar. Let stand 15 minutes, or while pastry is being made. Use as filling for 9-inch pie.

Fresh Peach and Banana Mold

1 package lime flavored gelatin
1 pint warm water
½ cup fresh peaches, sliced
1 banana, sliced

Dissolve lime flavored gelatin in warm water. Arrange sliced peaches on bottom of mold. Pour on warm gelatin, being careful not to disarrange peaches. Add banana. Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired. Serves six.

Ripe Pear Jam

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle pectin

Peel, core, and crush completely, or grind, about 3 pounds fully ripe pears. If desired, about 3 teaspoons spice may be added.

Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin and cover as above. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid oz. each).

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

WOMEN who do their own laundry work, can save themselves labor and time by following the few suggestions given today. Be sure to sort clothes carefully so that danger of colors from one article do not run on others. This is not quite so obvious a method as might seem, as recently a good laundress failed to take out a red handkerchief from those she was soaking, and several handkerchiefs were slightly stained before she realized the color was not fast.

Be sure to soak handkerchiefs in a container of cold water before putting them into the wash water. The work of getting the handkerchiefs clean is trebled, unless they have been for some moments in cold water, and have been rinsed well in it.

Clothes that have spots and stains on them, which will come out in the wash, should be especially rubbed with soap and the soil loosened before going into the tubs or the washing machine. It is easier to look over the clothes before they are wet. While this will take a little longer than to plunge them right into the tubs, the time taken is not wasted. It is either tiresome, if clothes are rubbed, or tedious, if machine washed, to wash every bit of the garments equally well, when it is only these spots that require especial treatment. Also it is often found that the marks remain unless given particular care.

Ironing Sheets.

Sheets can be ironed with the minimum effort, if folded as follows: 1st fold; with hems together their full width, and the wrong side out. 2nd fold; bring fold in line with hems. 3rd fold; turn the hemmed edge that is outside, to the opposite side. This makes each outside fold right side out and each side has the hem out. Roll the sheet to bring top hem inside. When ironing the sheet do not unfold. Iron one side and then the other, pressing firmly so that the inner part of the sheet is sufficiently ironed, as if it had been put through a mangle.

A quick way to iron handkerchiefs, is to press them without folding. Be sure to have hems, lace, and fancy edges ironed on wrong side. Do not fold until later. Then when sitting down, crease them in folds with the hands.

Hazards in Home.

Fighting hazards in the home is now a recognized work. These hazards vary from such little things as pins and needles on the floor, to the major danger of fires. Whatever causes accidents, should be eliminated or, if this is impossible in entirety, at least reduced to a minimum. Personal precautions can be taken. Carelessness can be reduced and carefulness increased.

There are some outstanding dangers that everyone in a home should realize. In this non-hazard campaign the whole family should be enlisted. Fire hazards are on the increase because of the recklessness of cigarette smokers. Smoking in bed has to be done with the utmost precaution. Never smoke when drowsy. You may get badly burned yourself. Or you may set fire to the newspaper, magazine or book, you are reading. If it falls to the floor, it may ignite whatever it touches, and destruction be rife.

Fire Escapes.

When there are three floors to a house, and it has no fire escape, it is a wise precaution to keep a coil of rope handy to rooms occupied. The rope must be long enough to reach the ground and there should be some secure way of fastening it, so that it would not slip with the weight of a person escaping down it from smoke or flames.

Accident hazards to be guarded are open stairways. These can be made free from danger by gates that come for the purpose, or, by chairs overturned in emergencies, or temporarily. Rugs that slip or turn up at corners are other hazards, because falls result, and these may be serious. Speaking of falls, it is amazing the number that come in bathtubs. Grab rails are insufficient, or awkwardly placed, and bottoms of tubs get slippery from soap. A heavy bath towel or a rubber bath mat in the tub, removes this hazard.

A doctor once said that many accidents would be prevented in homes, if persons did not walk around in bare feet. Stepping on a needle may give just a momentary twinge of pain, but if the needle breaks, as sometimes happens, the results may be serious.

WAYS TO SERVE GRIDDLE CAKES

Their Use With Main Course Is Popular Idea Today.

By EDITH M. BARBER

FOOD like clothes and furniture takes the trend of the day and is being "styled." Take for instance the old griddle cake, that ancient breakfast standby—it has graduated to lunch and even to dinner and what a welcome it gets in these days of light and hasty breakfasts!

Perhaps its most popular use at the moment is for service at the main course of the meal with chicken or other meat which has as accompaniment a cream gravy. I just don't know anything better than corn griddle cakes baked at the table on the electric griddle or grill and served piping hot to each person in turn, to eat with a smooth, brown, well-seasoned gravy. If you like you can make them serve for dessert at the same meal if you provide maple syrup or honey or strawberry jam.

Then there are plain griddle or "flannel" cakes, as we used to call them, which are delicious for luncheon with old-fashioned "frizzled" beef—you know the kind I mean, made by cooking the beef first in butter. These tender griddle cakes make a foundation for a number of interesting desserts. If plenty of shortening is used and if the batter is very thin, they take the place of the more expensive "crepe" mixture which is often used. I wonder if you have ever had them wrapped around slender rolls of cabbage or cream cheese and served with raspberry jam—or strawberry, if you prefer?

When these cakes are baked at the table, you can pass the cheese and jam with them. Other simple desserts may be made by adding blueberries, chopped apples, or ground nuts, and a little extra sugar to the pancake batter. In this case you may like plain or whipped cream to serve with the cakes.

The most fashionable sort of griddle cakes at the moment is of Russian origin and the cakes served in this fashion are known as "Blinys" (short for Blintchiky). The original recipe calls for a raised rye mixture very like an old-fashioned buckwheat flour. Personally I usually use my standard griddle cake recipe leaving out the sugar.

Blindys are served as a first course for dinner or a main course for luncheon. To each person is served two cakes and with them is passed a tray containing melted butter, caviare, minced onion, chopped hard-cooked egg whites, strained egg yolks, and sour cream—each in its individual bowl. The butter and caviare are put between the cakes and the rest of the accessories are put on top of them. You may not take the onion if you are not one of its fans but it must be served for the satisfaction of those persons who always demand its flavor with caviare.

An article on griddle cakes would not be complete without mention of potato pancakes which go so well with some meats and of German pancakes always baked in a huge frying pan, then rolled and cut in slices. Apples are often added to the batter. Then there are crepes suzette, the French pancakes for which it is not too easy at the moment to get the proper accessories, the liquor for flavoring the sauce and the brandy which must be set on fire to melt the sugar and to blend the flavoring and orange juice of the sauce. The cakes are baked and then cooked in the sauce at the table in a chafing dish or grill. The preparation of crepes suzette is an art which at a restaurant requires the services of several waiters, whereas I have seen them made at home with less ceremony by the hostess.

Guests are always interested in any food preparation made at the table and will appreciate any type of griddle cake baked for them under their observation. As for the family's opinion, you are certain to have the approval of your daily critics when you choose cakes for breakfast, lunch or dinner.

Note — Griddles need not be greased if plenty of shortening is used in the batter.

Griddle Cakes.

3 cups flour

1½ teaspoons soda
¼ cup sugar
2¼ cups sour milk

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Add the sour milk and egg well beaten. Add the melted shortening. Cook on both sides on a hot griddle. If sweet milk is used substitute four teaspoons of baking powder for the soda.

Corn Griddle Cakes.

1 cup cornmeal
1 cup flour
¼ cup sugar
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 egg
2 cups sour milk
¼ cup melted shortening

Mix dry ingredients. Beat egg, add milk and stir into other mixture. Add shortening, let stand five minutes and bake on both sides. If sweet milk is used, substitute four teaspoons of baking powder for the soda.

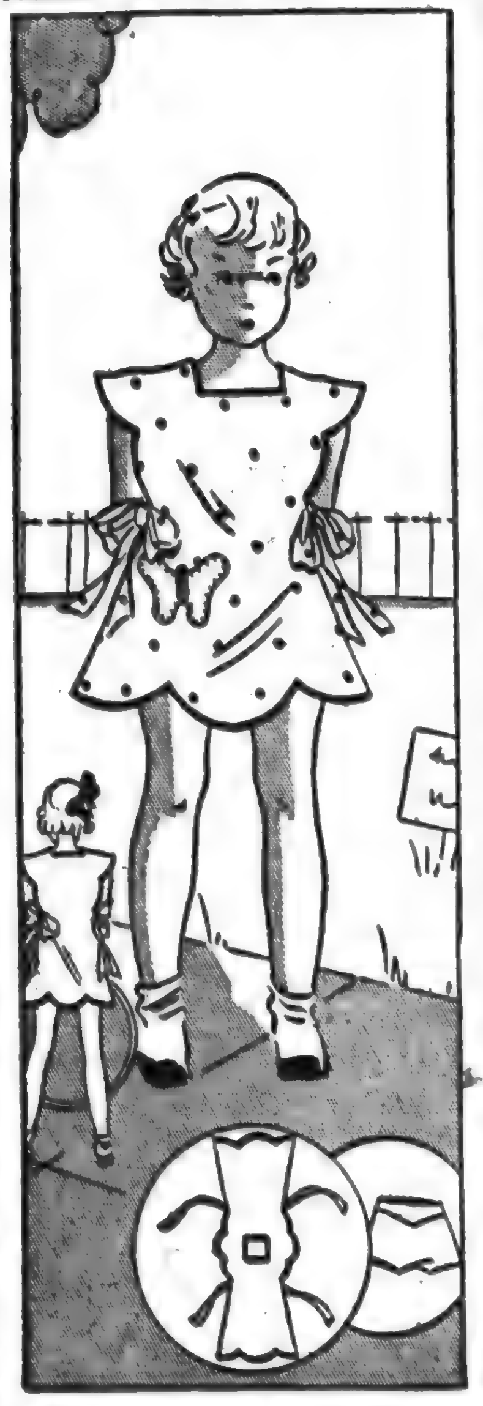
Pinafore for Little Girl

The clever cutting of this useful pinafore is shown in the small diagram beside the little girl. You will see at once that this frock requires no seaming and of course the feature which so greatly intrigues children is the butterfly which forms the pocket.



Pattern No. 1910-B

Notice how simple it is to put on, merely slipped over the head and tied at each side. Mothers find it a great help because it can be used as an apron over a frock, which must be kept clean, or worn instead of a frock. The panties to match are an asset—they have the comfortable French yoke top and stay snug but never bind. This attractive design made in cotton, percale, gingham, calico, or lawn would be effective with contrasting binding and colorful embroidery on the butterfly pocket.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1910-B is available for sizes 2, 4, 6, and 8. Size 6 requires 1 1-2 yards of 35 inch material plus 7-8 yard for the panties. Send fifteen cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send fifteen cents for your copy.

"Oh, I don't think so. He took engineering and they've got a rattling good engineering school. Bryn's family went there. They're part of the Stanford tradition. They always shine in football."

"Bryn's family?" Grandmother repeated slowly. Deborah, sick at heart, caught Tubby's eye. At sight of her face his own slowly lengthened. His mouth fell open. "But surely," Grandmother went on, "surely his family all went to Princeton. I remember quite distinctly. That would be, his father and his uncles. He has no brothers."

"I . . . I was thinking of his mother's family," Tubby said at last, still watching Deborah.

Deborah went across the veranda and rang the little silver bell. "You look tired, dear," she told her grandmother. "You must have some refreshment. Let me take Mr. Forbes away, and you rest for a few minutes before the tea comes."

Grandmother lifted her fan and moved it softly before her face. "I will be glad of some tea, Deborah," she murmured.

The tray came almost as she spoke, and at the same moment came the whine of Bryn's motor up the road. Almost immediately he was down the drive, and had given the group on the veranda one glance. His car stopped; a few seconds later he came around the corner of the house and to the foot of the steps. He walked up them slowly, his face unsmiling, his eyes on Tubby. Tubby put his cup down on the floor and stood buttoning his coat. Bryn stood waiting.

"Ah—er . . . I hope you can give me a few minutes of your time," Tubby began nervously. "It is in a noble cause, worthy sir. I am one whose sole interest is in the welfare of the nation. In other words, I should like to leave with you a small sample of my wares, just a small sample, sir, in forty-seven volumes. Nine dollars down and nine dollars a month till death do us part. This magnificent work . . ."

"Is it a book on etiquette?" Bryn inquired coldly.

"Etiquette? Oh, indeed, nothing of the kind. Although, of course, it contains chapters on etiquette. How to . . . to bathe the baby, and what soup to serve. That is the sort of thing you mean?"

"There should be something about invitations," Bryn answered. "Isn't there anything about not accepting invitations before they are offered? Or any remarks about getting bounced out of places where you haven't been asked?"

"Bryn," Deborah whispered, frantic, using his name almost for the first time. "Bryn, Grandmother thinks you mean it. Tell her."

Bryn turned toward Grandmother. She was leaning back on her pillows pale as death, her hand at her heart. She thought Tubby was an impostor.

But Bryn went across to her. "Are we upsetting you, Grandmother?" he asked, kneeling beside her. "I'm sorry. We don't mean it. The rosy-cheeked person standing so hang-doggedly, if there is such a word, before us, is one of my intimates. I have been more than good to him in the past. Many a time and oft I have shared with him my last bite and let him slap at the mosquito. You see how his presence affects me. My tongue goes off at a tangent. Did we frighten you?"

She began to smile at him. "How foolish of me to be upset," she said. "I might have guessed that you were joking. Deborah knew Mr. Forbes at once, and he brought your picture . . . but I thought . . . I was afraid . . ."

Bryn walked slowly, head bent, from the door of Grandmother's room, that night, to the door of his own. He had just helped her upstairs and had seen her to her own rooms with a last cheerful good-night smile. But as her door had closed, his smile faded.

There was a light under his own door. He opened it, went in, and closed it quietly behind him. Tubby sat in the armchair beside the window, waiting for him, a guiltily expectant look on his face.

"For the last two weeks," Bryn said evenly, "I have moved heaven and earth to create a good impression, to make everything go smoothly and comfortably, no questions asked. Give me another two months and you could have come up here and done your damnedest. But right now . . . well, you couldn't have chosen a better time. I'm still a new broom."

Tubby groaned. "I didn't know I was putting my foot in it," he said dismally. "She told me herself that you'd explained everything, and she called you Bryn. 'What difference does it make,' she said, 'what he's called?' Naturally, I thought you'd done the sensible thing, and confessed."

"Confessed what?"

Tubby was silent.

"What you've succeeded in doing is raising a question at the back of her mind. She doesn't actually mistrust me, even yet, but she wonders a little. I don't know what in the devil you told them, but it was certainly enough. There wasn't a suspicion in her mind as to my identity. Now you've succeeded in giving her something to puzzle over. She never quizzed me about my people before. Tonight she asked me questions. If Deborah hadn't been there I'd have had to wreck the show."

"Listen," Tubby said desperately. His face was almost pale. "I didn't know this whole business meant so much to you, Bryn. I thought it was all a lark. You said it was. I knew Deborah was beautiful, and sweet—anybody can see that—and that you . . . well, that you were interested in her. You'd be blind if you weren't . . ."

Bryn interrupted him. "And what did you say about Sally and Madeline? Whatever you said seems to have been adequate. Grandmother gave me a bad half hour, after Deborah was gone, tonight. She got me into her sitting room and quizzed me. She suggested delicately that Deborah's feeling might be quite distinctly hurt at the thought that there had been other girls in my life who had meant so much to me."

There was a long silence

"Bryn," Tubby broke in on him, "did Grandmother actually expect you and Deborah to fall into each other's arms the moment you met and . . . well, have everything all settled between you?"

"She hoped we would, yes."

Tubby gulped. "I don't quite understand her point of view," he went on. "Here's Deborah . . . she's nothing but a child. She doesn't know anything. She's as . . . fresh as a spring morning, and as unconscious about . . . well, about . . . that is, about . . ."

"You needn't flounder. I am aware of your meaning. In Victorian times a girl was supposed to be pure and entirely ignorant. Deborah doesn't know anything. She may have a few funny little ideas, but she doesn't know. That's one of the present difficulties. She's terrified. Well, a Victorian girl was supposed to have for her prospective husband only such feelings as respect and admiration and perhaps a gentle affection. Deborah was supposed to have those for Stuart Graham. They'd been inculcated in her. So Grandmother hadn't any compunction about handing her over to him." Bryn's face was contracted. "Poor little kid," he said under his breath.

Tubby began. "Does she think . . . does she expect . . . because if she does . . ."

"She does," Bryn said with bitterness. "She thinks that a wedding ring is a kind of magic talisman. If she knew that Deborah and I were . . . strangers, she'd die. Marriage is a kind of enclosure, to her. Deborah and I are one forever, she thinks, and the future is safe and secure. If life is smooth and unruffled she may live for years. If she is unhappy, troubled, she will just drift out. And if anything did happen to her, Deborah would never be happy again. She would always think she'd failed her."

Tubby stood up. He moved across to his friend, and faced him. "Bryn," he said steadfastly, "I don't want to make any more mistakes. I think I'm sure, but I'd like your word for it. I never saw you like this before. Is it the real thing, Bryn? It's got you, at last? You are in love with Deborah?"

Bryn pulled away. He went across to the window, and stood looking out at the stars. He turned and said, "Yes."

Tubby swallowed. Then, "I'm sorry I acted like a fool."

"It's all right, Tubby. Either . . . either it does come out all right, or it doesn't. Nothing you said would make any difference to Deborah, not even if you told her I'd been in love with half a dozen girls. She doesn't care anything about me."

"Listen," Tubby said. "Why don't you just show her how you feel, Bryn? I mean, put your arms around her and, well, kiss her. Can't you do that?"

"No."

"Why?"

"She gave me an opportunity once. I was afraid to. She wouldn't understand. You've got to remember that she doesn't understand anything. I'd frighten her. She might never get over it. If I've got a chance at all, Tubby, it's in letting her get used to me. Once she has confidence in me, really trusts me, once we get to be friends, then perhaps I can . . . oh, touch her hand once in a while. But if I frightened her now—I'm sunk."

"She wouldn't be frightened. I guess you're in love, all right. You're too modest, Bryn. She wouldn't be frightened. She'd find herself returning your kiss. It's more or less an unconscious process anyway, isn't it?"

Bryn stared at him, the gray eyes dreaming, far away. They came back to earth. Tubby had a suggestion.

"Why not get Sally and Madeline up here? Oh, Simon too, of course. Sally wouldn't come without him, and he'd be useful. You said Grandmother wanted young company for Deborah. Company now, and such company as my delightful sister, and her delightful husband, and his more than delightful sister . . . the way's been paved by those presents, you see, and my mention of the family relations . . . her mind would be too fully occupied to brood over you. We can tip the kids off. They're all good sports. And, for the deepest part of the plot—you know how Sally trots around at Simon's heels day and night, and kisses him at all the most awkward moments, and how they always hang on each other's arms?"

"Tubby," Bryn said after a moment, "you are a fool. Nevertheless . . ."

"Exactly."

Bryn considered, whistling softly. His eyes began to sparkle. Tubby, seeing them, reached across the writing table for paper and a pen. He wrote a note. He sealed it in an envelope. He addressed it to Mrs. Simon Vallance, at Hillsborough, California. "There," he said. "They're dying to come, anyway. So are a good many other people, as far as that goes."

"The Man Who-O-O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DRAFTED

FROM time to time there has been talk of "drafting" some candidate. However, there have been only two instances in our political history when a man was given the nomination against his will and in both cases the drafted candidate was defeated in the election.

In 1868 one of the issues raised by the Democrats was a demand for the payment of the war debt in paper money issued for this purpose. Its chief advocate was George H. Pendleton of Cincinnati and the appeal of the "Ohio Idea," was so great that he was the logical candidate for the nomination.

But Horatio Seymour, the Civil war governor of New York, was opposed to both the "Ohio Idea" and the candidacy of its chief supporter. As chairman of the convention he was able to prevent Pendleton's nomination but he could not keep the inflation plank out of the platform.

After many ballots and some confusion it turned to Seymour and, although he shouted from the platform "Your candidate I can not be!" the delegates went right ahead and nominated him.

Although Seymour polled 2,709,213 popular votes to 3,015,071 for Gen. U. S. Grant, the Republican nominee, and carried eight states, the electoral vote stood 214 for Grant and 80 for Seymour. This defeat ended his political career for he considered his acceptance of an unwanted nomination as the greatest mistake of his life and would never again consider running for any office.

Four years later a peculiar political situation resulted in another case of "drafting." A faction of the Republican party, dissatisfied with the Grant administration and his renomination, held another convention in Cincinnati and chose Horace Greeley for President and B. Gratz Brown of Missouri for vice-president. When the Democrats met in Baltimore they decided that a fusion ticket might defeat Grant so they also nominated Greeley and Brown.

But this action offended the "old line" Democrats so they held a convention in Louisville, Ky. For President they selected Charles O'Conor, a distinguished New York lawyer who had won the deep affection of the South by his efforts to secure the release of Jefferson Davis from prison at Fortress Monroe and to defend him against the charge of treason. O'Conor was nominated on the first ballot by a vote of 600 to four and for their vice-president they named John Quincy Adams of Massachusetts.

Immediately after the balloting O'Conor was notified by telegraph of his nomination and at once declined to accept it The convention was thrown into disorder and an attempt was made to give the honor to the permanent chairman, James Lyons of Virginia, but he refused. So the convention adopted a resolution reiterating the selection of O'Conor and Adams and immediately adjourned. In the election which followed O'Conor and Adams received 29,489 votes scattered through 23 states. This was not an impressive showing but the "Greeleyites" did little better and the 29,000 had the satisfaction of knowing that they had been true to a plank in their platform which read, "We welcome an eternal minority under the banner inscribed with our principles rather than an almighty and everlasting majority purchased by their abandonment."

MORE THAN A WHISPER

RARE indeed is the Presidential contest which does not bring out a "whispering campaign"—that attempt to discredit a candidate by circulating slanderous stories reflecting upon his morals or motives. So it is refreshing to learn that occasionally political partisans dare to speak out boldly against an opponent instead of working against him secretly and in the dark—to shout rather than to whisper.

One of the earliest examples of this kind of campaigning took place during the Adams-Jackson contest in 1828. It was a printed placard which read:

IMMORALITY

"Fellow citizens, can we vote for the man who openly sets the laws of the great Jehovah at defiance, thereby showing a bad example to our children? Some few Sundays ago Mr. Adams passed through Providence galloping and running his horse, and at every tavern stopping to receive the salutes or huzzahs of the Federal Party. I have always been an Adams man until he violated and trampled on the laws of God; now my conscience forbids my supporting him. I therefore shall choose Andrew Jackson, one who keeps holy the Sabbath Day.

A Professor of Religion.
Kittery Point, Maine,
Sept. 9, 1828."

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Receipts of livestock and prices were far above expectations this week with prices generally more pleasing to the seller than the buyer.

Hogs: Steadily increasing prices during the first days of the week more than doubled the number of slaughter hogs offered in last week's sale. All fat hogs were too high to ship East and sold to packers within 100 miles at prices as follows: 180 to 225, $10.80 to $10.90 with a very liberal sort; while lots with an average above 225 changed hands at $10.70. Bred gilts weighing in the neighborhood of 225 sold by the head at $22.50. Feeder pigs were higher last week reflecting the raise in fat hog prices while roughs were taken readily at $8.40 to $9.00 and boars from $4.05 to $4.35.

Veals: Receipts 32 head. Top $8.45; light, thin and grass veals from $6.00 to $7.50. There is a wide range in price between top and lower grades of veals and it would seem that there would be profit in making more of them of better quality.

Sheep and Lambs: All grades of sheep are selling on an active market. Lambs $7.90 to $8.90. Ewes $2.00 to $3.25. Bucks $1.50.

Cattle: All grades of butcher cattle off of pasture are selling at lower prices altho the bidding showed some strength over last week. Cast off dairy cows in thin flesh $2.75. Cutters and low cutters $3.00 to $3.25 with some in better flesh at $3.65 to $4.40. Heifers $6.35. Bulls $5.65 down.

Budget-Balancer No. 1 —The Housewife

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

If our political spendthrifts really want to learn how to balance their budgets let them turn to the average American housewife.

She's Budget-Balancer No. 1.

She has to be. Unlike the newer economists in public office she cannot spend two dollars for every dollar she takes in, and blandly load the difference on the public. She has to cut her expenditures to fit whatever income a pay envelope may afford.

That's why those "indirect" taxes which boost the family food bill, the family rent bill, the family bills for clothing and for everything else she buys, mean so much to her. No matter on whom the tax-creators and tax-eaters attempt to load the cost, the bill is finally paid out of her thin purse.

How deeply do the billions squandered by office-holders during recent years cut into the average housewife's operating funds?

Well, research workers have estimated that the majority of taxes collected by government are passed on to the public in the form of increased prices—and that, so disguised, they consume one dollar out of every five which finds its way into the family pocketbook.

Actually, then, the average housewife faces a dual responsibility—first, to conserve the contents of the family purse, and, second, to demand that politicians cease the reckless squandering and piling on of taxes which rob her of the benefits of her sacrifices and economies.

In the overwhelming majority of American families she has succeeded in balancing her own budget. Now she is insisting that the politicians cooperate by learning to balance theirs.

The WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONAL

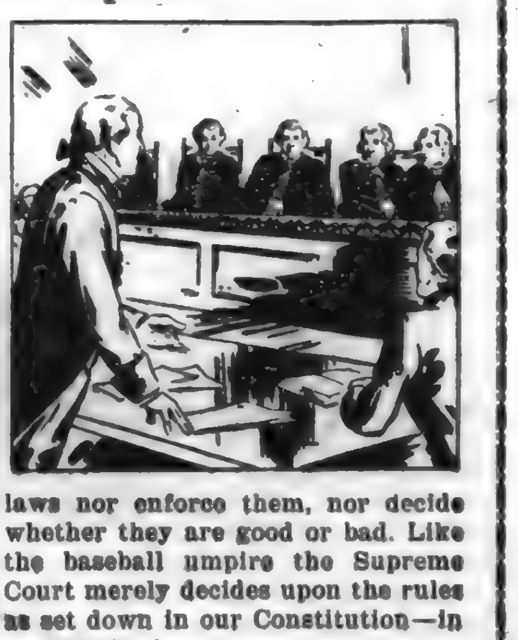
by MAX BERNS

Rules and Umpires

HOW may baseball be compared to our Constitution?

To provide for an orderly game, baseball rules are made and an umpire provided to see that the game is played according to the rules. The rules can be changed by the proper authorities, but not by the umpire or the players. And the umpire does not decide whether the pitching, hitting and fielding are good or bad. He simply decides whether a ball is foul or fair, whether a runner is safe or out. The rules, together with an umpire to interpret them, keep the game from being a "free-for-all."

In our government "we the people" make our Constitution the national rule book in which we state what our representatives — Congress and the President—may and may not do. We provide further that the Supreme Court shall be the chief umpire to see that our rules are obeyed. As in baseball, the rules—our Constitution—can be changed by the proper authority—namely, the people, but not by Congress, the Executive or the Courts. And the Court does not make laws nor enforce them, nor decide whether they are good or bad. Like the baseball umpire the Supreme Court merely decides upon the rules as set down in our Constitution—in our rule book.



Without an established set of rules and without an umpire to see that these rules are obeyed, government, like baseball, would become a "free-for-all."

A few random remarks on the subject of money and wealth. The federal debt is about 34 billion. The states recently received 350 millions for relief. Gold has been discovered within 50 miles of New York City. An heiress finds she cannot live on 118 thousand dollars a year. A Virginia man is too busy to look after a 160 acre farm and gives it away. The most cheering item comes from an Ohio veteran, who sets aside his bonus to enable him to acopt some orphan children.

Landon Pledges Jobs, Lower Cost of Government, and Aid to Farmers

80,000 Assemble to Hear Candidate Voice Plans and Criticize New Deal Incompetency.

PRAIRIE STATE GOVERNOR SPEAKS

Excerpts follow from the acceptance speech of Gov. Alf M. Landon, delivered at Topeka, Kas., July 23, 1936:

"The (1936) record shows the primary need is still for jobs for unemployed."

* * *

"Those who need relief will get it."

* * *

"Mounting debts and taxes constitute a threat to all (our) aims."

* * *

"No sound national policy will neglect the farmer . . . the administration has taken the American farmer out of foreign markets and put the foreign farmer into the American market."

* * *

"The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer . . . plant, craft or industry . . . free from interference from any source."

* * *

"Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive, or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

Topeka, Kas.—With all the impressive simplicity and the searching earnestness of a Lincoln, Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, "a typical prairie state," made his speech accepting the Republican nomination for President July 23 before an audience of nearly 80,000 gathered at the south entrance of the Kansas state house.

His address was in reply to the official notification given him by Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, that the Republican party had conferred upon him its highest honor. Besides the wildly enthusiastic throng who filled Topeka to overflowing, Governor Landon's talk was heard by millions of radio listeners.

The first sentence of his speech accepted the honor. His second: "In accepting this leadership, I pray for Divine Guidance to make me worthy of the faith and the confidence which you have shown in me," adding: "Facing this honor and responsibility, I hope for the gift of simple and straightforward speech. I want every man and woman in this nation to understand my every word, for I speak of issues deeply concerning us all."

"Short of Success"

Governor Landon first dealt with the social policies of relief and unemployment, declaring "The New Deal has fallen far short of success," and went on to explain his plans to correct the evils. Make the Social Security act "workable," freed from "political exploiters," he urged, and pledged his party never to neglect the obligations to the unemployed.

He next scored rising public debts and taxes and the "uncertainties" of the present administration's policies which have frightened the average American and prevented the launching of new enterprises which would promote recovery.

He rapped the New Deal with: "The most important question now before us: Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

The address concluded with a succinct series of statements as to his belief in Constitutional government and his proposals for the executive policies, if elected. Summarized, these were:

"The Republican party does not believe the people wish to abandon the American form of government.

"We propose to maintain the Constitutional balance of power between the states and the federal government.

"We propose to use the full power of the federal government to break up private monopolies.

Rights of People.

"A free competitive system is necessary to a free government.

"Neither political nor civil liberty long survives the loss of economic liberty. Each and all of these liberties, with the precious human rights which they involve, must be preserved intact and inviolate.

"I propose to restore our government to an efficient as well as Constitutional basis.

"I shall co-operate wholeheartedly with congress in an effective reorganization of government agencies, to eliminate duplication, to insure better administration, and to save the taxpayers' money.

"It is the right of our people to have their government well administered.

"These are some of the aims and proposals of a Republican administration (pledged) to conduct the public business with honesty, frugality, courage and common sense.

"I look forward to the America that is to be.

"It should be a nation in which the old wrong things are going out and the new right things are coming in.

"It should be a country which produces more and more until there is plenty for all, with a fair chance for all to earn their share.

"It should be a land in which equal opportunity shall prevail and special privilege shall have no place.

"It should be an America that shall . . . drive the curse of war from the earth; an America that, for the sake of all mankind as well as ourselves, shall never lose the faith that human freedom is a practical ideal.

"Everything we need for realization (of these aims) we can find within the principles under which this nation has grown to greatness.

"God grant us, one and all, the strength and the wisdom to do our part in bringing these things to pass."

Early in his address, Governor Landon pledged himself to the Republican platform with the words: "The 1936 platform has my complete adherence. It sets out the principles by which we can achieve the full national life that our resources entitle us to enjoy."

His reference to the question of how many promises the present administration has broken, was: "The citizen who assumes the direction of the Executive branch takes an oath that he will, to the best of his ability, 'preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.' No man, in common good faith to his fellow citizens, may rightfully assume the duties of the high office of Chief Executive and take the oath unless he shall keep his oath inviolate. It is with a full understanding of the meaning of this oath that I accept this nomination."

On relief and unemployment Governor Landon committed himself to the policy: "Those who need relief will get it. . . . We will not take our economies out of the unemployed. We will take them out of the hides of political exploiters. The whole American people want to work at full time and full pay (with) the right to live according to American standards. . . . The (1933) record showed the primary need was jobs for unemployed. The (1936) record shows the primary need is still for jobs for unemployed. . . . The New Deal has fallen far short of success. . . . American initiative is not a commodity to be delivered by the pound, through some government bureau.

Governmental Intimidation.

"We must be freed from incessant governmental intimidation and hostility. We must be freed from excessive expenditures and crippling taxation. We must be freed from an arbitrary and uncertain monetary policy. We must be freed from private monopolistic control. Once these things are done, the energies of the American economic system will remedy the ravages of depression and restore full employment.

"The security of us all depends on the good management of our common affairs," was the keynote of his economic theme. "We must be able to produce and accumulate enough to finance our normal progress. . . . Mounting debts and increasing taxes constitute a threat to all of these aims.

"Taxes add to the price of everything. By taking more out of the family purse they leave less for family security. Let us not be misled by those who tell us others will be made to carry the burden. Even if we tax to the limit those best able to pay, the average taxpayer will still have to bear the major part. For every single dollar spent, we will pay back two dollars.

People Finally Pay.

"Crushing debts and taxes are usually incurred, as today, under the guise of helping people—the same people who must finally pay them."

As to national agriculture, Governor Landon stated flatly:

"No sound national policy will neglect the farmer, because the needs of a great nation require that its food producers always stand upon a plane in keeping with the importance of their service." He accused the present administration of having "taken the American farmer out of foreign markets, and put the foreign farmer into the American market," adding: "The loss of markets both at home and abroad far outweighs the value of all the benefits paid to farmers."

He declared American farmers are "entitled to all of the home market they can supply without injustice to the consumer. We propose a policy to protect them in this right."

He declared for soil conservation, and for protection of "the wealth of the soil"; for flood prevention and "national land use" programs; for "widespread ownership of medium-sized tracts," according to the Republican Homestead act; and for maintenance of "opportunity" to all in agriculture.

"We shall fulfill its (the platform's) pledge to give every reasonable assistance to producers in areas suffering from afflictions," he promised, and charged the Roosevelt administration with having "gambled with the needed feed and food supplies, through its program of scarcity." It overlooked the fact that Mother Nature cannot be regimented," he said. "The time has now come (to) replace this futile program with one economically and socially right."

Right to Organize.

On the subject of labor, he recognized the rights and usefulness of organized labor, and added: "The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer, whether it covers their plant, craft, or industry . . . free from interference from any source."

Discussing "the basic principles upon which our Nation is founded," he said: "The prime needs of men have not changed since the Declaration. The people themselves set up this government . . . any change which the people want they can have. . . . But for any official or branch . . . to attempt such change without authority from the people, is to do an unwarranted and illegal act."

"There has now appeared the impulse to take away and lodge with the Chief Executive, without the people's consent, the powers which they have kept in their state governments or reserved to themselves. It is not my belief that the Constitution is above change. But change must come through the people and not by usurpation."

"By Deeds Performed and Promises Fulfilled"

Topeka, Kas.—Excerpts follow from the address by Representative Bertrand H. Snell notifying Governor Alf M. Landon of his selection as the Republican presidential nominee:

"Here and now this nation turns its back forever upon broken promises and hollow oaths!"

* * *

"The spontaneous expression of popular sentiment from coast to coast, which culminated in your nomination at Cleveland, offers eloquent testimony that your authority is rooted in the silent, secret hearts of the whole people."

* * *

"The crisis which calls you to be first among us will never yield to the sounding shibboleths of mere partisanship. You are saluted today by patriots of all parties!"

* * *

"Here in a solvent Kansas the people found a man who worked calmly amid all the noisy din of the New Deal's failures and false starts. They found a man who kept his books and the books of his government by simple, honest, old-fashioned arithmetic . . . a man who stood like a rock against the hallucinations of those who supposed that they could guide America to stability and prosperity by shameful political squandering of the people's substance. In this choice our people are guided by deeds performed and promises fulfilled!"

DIES SUDDENLY AT QUINCY, MICHIGAN

Mrs. Fred Reichelderfer 63, of Quincy, Mich., a sister of the late John Betz, of St. Joe, and well known here, passed away suddenly at her home Saturday following only a few minutes illness.

Two weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Reichelderfer had gone to a nearby lake to spend the day. Going down a bank, she slipped and was thrown against a tree, the doctor thought the chest bone might have been broken. When she took sick, the lady of the apartment came in and called Mr. Reichelderfer from work; but before he arrived, she passed away.

One sister, Mrs. Nettie Helf, of near Defiance, the husband, four children, Fay, of Dayton, Ohio, Dale and Mrs. Marie Spencer, of Fort Wayne, and Mrs. Bernice Adcock, of Defiance.

The St. Joe relatives, Mrs. Mary Betz and Ada Berry, and Mrs. Hazel Steward of Spencerville, attended the funeral.

Burial took place at Harlan, Tuesday afternoon.

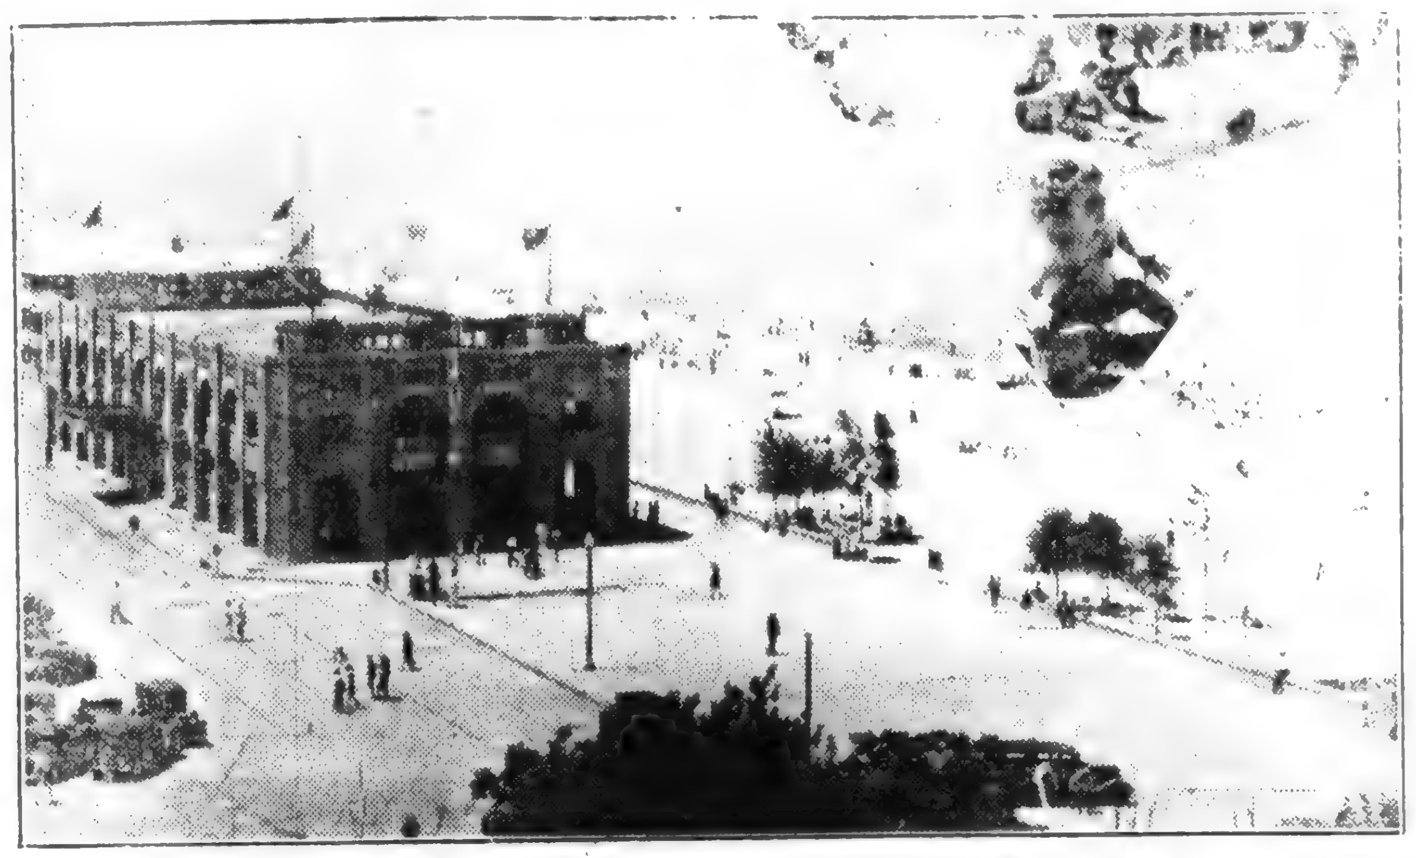
Three Mile Beach Along Lake Michigan A Major Attraction at Indiana Dunes State Park



Stretching for three miles along the southern tip of Lake Michigan and easily accessible by motor or train, is Indiana Dunes state park, vacation playground for Hoosiers and visitors from other states. From the east and west motorists reach the park over Roads 12, 20 or 6 and from the south over Roads 49, 152 and 29 with Chesterton the nearest city.

The bathing beach, a section of which is shown above, is one of the finest on the lake while the other attractions—the sand dunes, the group camp, the forest, hiking trails, picnic and camping areas make this one of Indiana's most interesting state parks. Its setting and landscape are unique, entirely different from those of other Indiana state parks.

The fine white sand of the beach is swept by breezes off the lake and warmed by the sun—an ideal place for the entire family to play. At the edge of the beach is the pavilion with complete facilities for the bathers on the second floor. Meals and concessions are on the first floor with the Arcade hotel adjoining. Across the park, near the Tremont entrance is Duneside Inn where cottages and meals are available.

While the bathing beach is the feature attraction for thousands of visitors, Dunes state park has a widespread appeal. Botanists and nature students spend fascinating hours studying the hundreds of species of plant life. Geologists are interested in the formation of the sand dunes which advance and retract before the wind and waves. The forested area is alive with birds and small wildlife which challenge identification.

Within the park, in wooded areas, are extensive picnic areas complete with tables, benches shelter houses, cooking ovens and other facilities. Scores of tents and trailers, summer homes for the warm months, occupy the attractive camp areas. This year a new group camp has been opened, serving Boy and Girl Scouts, 4-H clubs and other groups.

Indiana Dunes state park has an interesting historical background. The area was traversed by Indian trails and the French explorers landed here as they pushed into the Mississippi Valley.

WEEK-END ACCIDENTS ABOUT ST. JOE

Accidents of various kinds were plentiful here last week-end. Starting in with Friday night about 5:30, Emerson D. Denton, of Fort Wayne, was rendered unconscious for a short time following a collision at the Widney orchard corners, when Mrs. Ruth Coburn drove her Chevrolet coupe onto Road 1 in the path of the Denton car going north. Denton tried to miss the car by turning right, striking the car in the front fender and plunging his car into the I. & M. light pole and it surely did wreck it. Mr. Denton said he saw it was a lady driving, so he took the chance, otherwise he would have struck the Coburn car in the center and possibly killed Mrs. Coburn and their small child.

Mr. Denton was headed for Butler to adjust an accident, taking place there Sunday.

The Kinsey ambulance was called but by the time it arrived Mr. Denton had come to himself and was able to get out of his car. Sheriff Grimm was called and the cars were later removed from the road.

Saturday noon, Walter Tiele, truck driver for the St. Joe Flour Mill, parked in front of Sheffer's restaurant, coming out he did not look about to see whether or not a car had parked near him while eating his dinner. He backed the monster truck from under the shade tree into a Chevrolet car occupied by an old gentleman and two small children. He crushed the left fender and broke the cowl lights before he could stop. Ward Woodcox, sitting in front of The News office, saw what was about to take place, called to stop him. The damage was small, and was agreed to be repaired by the mill.

Mrs. Inez Hadsell also frightened people at the coal office when she fell from a roll of wire fencing in looking over their stock. She was taken to the office and Dr. Shook hurriedly responded to the call for medical aid, and the examination revealed a badly sprained left shoulder. It was thought that the shoulder was dislocated at first. Mrs. Hadsell was taken home and later in the day she was able to drive her car.

Saturday afternoon Earl Kinsey fell on the pavement, as he was crossing near the Kinsey store. He was picked up and rushed home in an automobile. He said later that he was talking with some of the boys and one of them in turning round some way accidently struck Earl in the side. As he started for the store he became sick and staggering, he fell to the pavement. Earl has not been well and this antic completly overcame him.

At about 2 o'clock, a fire call from the D. D. Burley farm was received and the department and available citizens rushed to extinguish the blaze. Mrs. Harold Spencer said she and her son had been burning paper on the trash pile in the orchard and the wind spread the fire over the entire orchard, burning west along the road and then into the Shull pasture field. It was making headway when the department arrived but was soon under control. Mrs. Spencer and son, only ones at home, did their best to stop the spreading, but seeing that they needed help sent the son a half-mile to the Fred Ulm farm to do the calling. Mrs. Spencer was badly frightened and said she had learned her lesson in burning trash of any kind in the open.

Edgar Lysher, of north-east of town, was taken suddenly ill with strangulated hernia Saturday night, and a call for the Kinsey ambulance was made and he was rushed to the Dr. Bonnell Souder hospital in Auburn, and operated on at once. Monday he was reported as recovering in fine shape.

This is his second hernia operation.

Monday, W. P. Donahue, of HK tower, called the fire department to extinguish a grass fire near the old Culbertson farm, west of town, as it was spreading near the farm buildings. Sparks from a B. & O. train set fire to the grass.

FAMILY DIFFERENCES ARE SETTLED IN COURT

Declaring her husband hit her with a chair because she wouldn't eat her dinner, Edna Grace Jarrett was assured of a divorce in the DeKalb circuit court from Leonard B. Jarrett Saturday as soon as the court costs are paid.

Mrs. Jarrett also alleged that her mate cursed her and struck her with his fist. The couple married May 12, 1925, and Mrs. Jarrett said her husband's cruelty was started in 1927. She kept a written record of the occasions, she told Judge Endicott. She also testified that her husband told her he didn't care for her any more and that if she didn't leave their home in Concord township, he would. So on the morning of last Nov. 18 she said she did the housework and then took leave, walking fourteen miles to her present home in Jackson township.

Jarrett had filed a complaint in which he charged his wife with nagging him, neglecting her duties and with finally abandoning him, but he did not testify and the case was submitted to Mrs. Jarrett's cross complaint. Judge Endicott agreed to restore her former name, Edna DePew.

MRS. HENDRICKS PASSES SUDDENLY AT AUBURN

A pulmonary hemorrhage at 9:30 Thursday night caused the death of Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Hendricks at the home of her sister, Mrs. Laura Baker, of 409 Michigan Ave., Auburn. Mrs. Hendricks was preparing to retire when the attack came and within ten minutes she expired. Her health had not been good for several years and the infirmities of age probably brought on the hemorrhage.

Mrs. Hendricks was born near St. Joe on March 29, 1859 and her age was 77 years, 4 months and one day. Her maiden name was Sarah Elizabeth Wineland. She was united in marriage with Emanuel D. Hendricks in 1890 and he died in January, 1922. Mrs. Hendricks had been a resident of Auburn since 1914.

There survive one son, Simon Hendricks, of 803 South Indiana Avenue, a railway mail clerk; three brothers, E. E. Wineland, of Auburn, John Wineland, of St. Joe, and Hugh Wineland, of Elkhart. Three sisters, survive, Mrs. Laura Baker at whose home Mrs. Hendricks died, Mrs. A. R. Cole, of Garrett and Mrs. Peter Pontius, of Elkhart. There are four grandchildren.

The deceased was a member of the Church of Christ.

The funeral service was held Sunday afternoon at the Church of Christ in Auburn at 2 o'clock. Rev. Joseph N. Scholes, of St. Joe, assisted by Rev. G. L. Fisher, pastor of the Auburn Church of Christ, officiated and burial was made in the K. of P. cemetery at St. Joe.

"The Man Who-O-O"
Tales and Traditions from American Political History
By FRANK E. HAGEN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HE DEFEATED HIMSELF

HISTORIANS lay the blame for James G. Blaine's defeat to a number of men. But the fact is that Blaine defeated himself—with the aid of Roscoe Conkling.

It started when both men were young congressmen. One day in 1866 the New Yorker, who had been lording it over the lower house, became engaged in a dispute with the Maine representative and declared haughtily: "If the member from Maine had the least idea how profoundly indifferent I am to his opinion upon the subject under debate, I think he would hardly take the trouble to express it."

Blaine rose and, facing Conkling, delivered this speech: "As to the gentleman's cruel sarcasm, I hope he will not be too severe. The contempt of that large-minded gentleman is so wilting; his haughty disdain, his grandiloquent swell, his majestic, supereminent, overpowering turkey gobbler strut has been so crushing to myself and all the members of the house that I know it was an act of the greatest temerity to venture upon a controversy with him. But, sir, I know who is responsible for this. It is not his fault. It is the fault of another. That gifted and satirical writer, Theodore Tilton of the New York Independent, spent some weeks in this city recently. His letters published in that paper embraced, with many serious statements, a little jocose satire, a part of which was the statement that the mantle of the late Winter Davis had fallen upon the member from New York. That gentleman took it seriously and it has given his strut additional pomposity. The resemblance is striking. Hyperion to a satyr; Thersites to Hercules; mud to marble; dunghill to diamond; a singed cat to a royal Bengal tiger; a whining puppy to a roaring lion."

That brief talk—it took only two minutes—ruined Blaine's political career forever. It completely squelched Conkling but it pierced his vanity to the roots. From that moment he hated Blaine and for the next 20 years devoted himself to thwarting the "Plumed Knight." Twice he kept the New Englander from getting the Republican nomination and once contributed to his defeat at the polls in November.

ROORBACK

AS ELECTION time nears, watch out for "roorbacks" — those campaign lies which are circulated in the last few days of a campaign by partisans of one candidate to discredit and perhaps aid in defeating another candidate. We've had such canards in every political campaign since the days of John Adams but it wasn't until 1844 that they were given their distinctive name.

On August 1 of that year a letter was printed in the Ithaca (N. Y.) Journal which asserted that James K. Polk, the Democratic candidate, branded his slaves with his initials as though they were so many cattle. Other abolitionist journals promptly reprinted the letter to sway sentiment in the North against the Tennessean and it was as promptly denounced by Polk's supporters.

The editor of the Journal was attacked viciously and he retaliated by starting libel suits against his detractors. He declared that the truth of the statement could not be doubted, since the authority for the statement was a book which had "received the approbation of every American critic." It was Roorback's "Tour Through Southern and Western States in the Year 1836" and Roorback was a foreign observer with no personal interests and no friends to flatter. Moreover he had written his book long before Polk was a candidate for President.

But Polk's friends soon proved that the whole thing was a hoax. They showed that the alleged quotation from Roorback's "Tour" had been lifted from George William Featherstonaugh's "Excursion Through the Slave States." After giving verbatim this Englishman's description of a slave trader's encampment, the author of the letter to the Ithaca Journal had added: "Forty of these unfortunate beings had been purchased, I was informed, of the Hon. J. K. Polk, the present speaker of the house of representatives; the mark of the branding iron, with the initials of his name on their shoulders, distinguishing them from the rest."

After this revelation, the whole "villainous forgery" was investigated, the editor of the Ithaca Journal was exonerated and the author of the letter exposed as a Democratic officeholder, belonging to a faction opposed to Polk. The excitement over this incident died down before the election but by that time the fame of "Roorback," a man who had never existed, was firmly established and his name has come down in history as a synonym for a political forgery or a lie in a whispering campaign.

TAKE CARE WITH VACATION MEALS

Proper Regulation of Daily Diet Is Essential.

By EDITH M. BARBER

THAT annual vacation! How much we expect from it. Renewed vitality to supply us for the rest of the year is what we hope to crowd into a few weeks. Change of scene, plenty of sun, swimming, golf or tennis or just a good loaf will often stimulate spirits and health.

There are certain precautions, however, which the vacationer must take. While he may forget without undue effects such prosaic things as balanced meals and probably should call a halt on any dieting, it is important that he makes sure that water and milk are uncontaminated. Cases of typhoid fever are always more numerous in the fall according to city health department records after country vacations.

It is also wise to be careful as far as possible about sanitary conditions of food service. While it is impossible for us to know much about this when we eat a casual meal at a strange place, it is just as well to avoid made over dishes in strange surroundings. I like to know from where croquettes, creamed meats and fish and other dishes of this sort come. In warm weather foods of this sort are easily contaminated and from them may result attacks of what we call ptomaine poisoning which is uncomfortable and which may be serious. Unripe or overripe fruit should also be avoided as a potential danger.

On the positive side, the use of plenty of fruits and vegetables of good quality is particularly desirable for the sake of keeping fit so that you may enjoy your vacations. Have a good time!

Summer Salad

Pick over and wash one bunch watercress. Remove outside leaves from one small head of cabbage. Take off enough perfect outside leaves to use later for serving. Remove core from remaining cabbage and chop finely. Allow to stand in ice water until crisp. Peel and chop one large cucumber. Wash twelve radishes and slice crosswise. Drain cabbage and mix with cucumber and radishes. Cut the cress fine and add to cabbage. Chill thoroughly. Just before serving, mix with French dressing and then moisten with cooked salad dressing. Serve in cabbage leaves with a generous garnish of celery seed.

Ginger Grape Punch

Deviled Eggs

6 hard cooked eggs
1-4 cup mayonnaise
1 teaspoon mixed mustard

1-2 cup chilli sauce
1 tablespoon minced green pepper

Mix all ingredients thoroughly.

Little Ginger Cakes

1 cup sugar
1 egg
1-2 cup milk
1-8 teaspoon salt
2 cups sifted flour.
3 teaspoons baking powder
3-4 teaspoon ginger

Cream butter and sugar, add egg, well beaten. Sift flour, salt, baking powder and ginger, and add alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Pour into small buttered muffin tins. Sprinkle with sugar and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees Fahrenheit, from 20 to 25 minutes.

Onion Sandwiches

The Household

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

THE pantry gets its note of attractive decoration when the shelves have gay frames surrounding them. This little room is one in constant use. It is seen by everyone who is privileged to go through the dining room to the kitchen, or who glimpses the pantry from kitchen or dining room. The pantry is an ante-room of both these main rooms, and it savors a little of each, besides having its own character. It can be made a decorative element of the home. The shelf treatment furthers this decoration.

Simple frames are suggested as most suitable as they require the minimum of care without losing anything in ornament. The material can be any one of the many substitutes for wood or it can be of the latter material. The homemaker can make the frames herself with a jigsaw, or she can have a carpenter cut the curved outlines. If she makes the frames of wood substitutes, it is possible to draw the curved outlines on the material, and with a very sharp knife cut the contours herself.

Deft Work

By careful planning, one line of cutting can supply two contours exactly alike when separated, since the curves can interlock in their outlines. Careful drawing is needed, and deft cutting. The work of a carpenter, however, is slight, and would therefore cost little. He will nail the frames with precision to the edges of the shelves. Then all that remains is for the homemaker to paint the frames whatever color desired.

The way to have the painting most ornamental is to use two colors, let us say blue and gold-yellow. Paint the edges, that is, the frame width of wood, with the yellow, and the frames themselves blue. The shelves can be yellow with the wall-background blue or this color scheme can be reversed. This scheme is too full of color for some pantries, so let me suggest another, two shades of gray with white. Or canary yellow, gray, and white.

The painted frames set off the wares of the pantry to advantage as well as proving ornamental in themselves. An ordinary pantry becomes a decorative asset of the home when it has its shelves framed as described.

POULTRY

ROTATING RUNS IS BEST FOR TURKEYS

Limited Summer Range, More Green Feed.

By E. M. Funk, of the Missouri College of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

The summer range for turkeys should be limited in area, with temporary fences used in rotating the runs. An acre of good alfalfa or clover will be a sufficient area on which to raise 100 to 125 10-weeks-old turkeys to market age.

It is advisable to divide this one acre into four sections of approximately the same size, and rotate the runs, using each about two weeks before moving the temporary fence to another section. By rotating the runs every two weeks, more green feed will be provided, and this is regarded as a more sanitary practice. A five or six-foot fence is usually high enough to keep the turkeys confined, especially when they are provided with plenty of feed. Should they give too much trouble in flying, their primary wing feathers can be clipped.

Unless natural shade is available, artificial shade should be provided during the summer and early fall months. Protection from the sun may be provided by an arbor of straw or brush. During hot weather, a large consumption of feed can be secured if water containers and both grain and mash hoppers are kept in the shade.

Throughout the feeding period of both young and old stock, every sanitary precaution should be taken against disease and parasites.

Offer High Quality Eggs on the Roadside Market

Poultrymen who sell eggs at roadside markets should offer only the highest quality product, says J. C. Taylor, associate extension poultryman at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers university.

Roadside stand patrons will pay fair prices for good quality, Taylor reminds poultrymen, and many producers have built up a year-round market through a reputation for being reliable.

His suggestions to poultrymen operating roadside markets follow:

Sell only infertile eggs. This means that no male birds should be with the laying flock.

Collect eggs twice a day and store them in a cool, clean cellar away from strong odors. Exposing eggs to extreme fluctuations of temperature causes rapid evaporation of their contents.

Sell all eggs in cartons—not in paper bags. The carton provides a means of advertising, reduces breakage, and makes handling easier.

Machine to Aid Poultrymen

Five thousand laying hens can be cared for by one person if they are housed in a new hen battery equipped with an electric cleaning device. The apparatus plugs into the nearest socket and the motor operates a small shovel scraper over the pans beneath the cages. In four minutes of use, the pan is scraped clean and the cleaner empties into containers at the end of each row of cages. Removing and emptying these containers is the only manual labor involved. Attached to each cage is a box large enough to contain food for several days. The bottom of the cage has an incline down which the egg rolls into a receiving cup.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Poultry Items

All poultry is 11,000,000 pounds short of last year.

Chile's Araucana chickens lay blue-colored eggs.

• • •

Canadians are said to be the greatest egg eaters in the world.

• • •

Dark combs may indicate enteritis, blackhead, ptomaine poisoning or congestion of the lungs; also liver disease.

• • •

Paralysis is still a mystery. There is no general agreement as to cause.

• • •

A permanent pasture for turkeys saves money for the poultryman and benefits the turkeys.

• • •

On an average, about 40 per cent of the hens stop laying before September 1. If the culls are removed during this period rather than after October 1, about one and one-half tons of feed will be saved on a flock of 1,000 birds.

• • •

Size of the egg depends on the hen's breeding; size runs in the blood.

• • •

Chicks that are confined are more likely to develop cannibalism than those that run out-of-doors early in life.

• • •

A good tree-spray oil can also be used to spray chicken houses. H. H. Alp, extension poultryman, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, says the oil spray penetrates better than most sprays.

Captivating Daytime Frock

This clever dress features a flattering yoke which dips to a point in front and is equipped with twin slashes a few inches below the neckline to accommodate a ribbon bow of any color you wish to use. Most women like several different ones to which they match their accessories. Radiating tucks at the yoke and waist contribute a smooth fit and flattering effect, while center seams in front and back terminate in two kick pleats for reserved fullness where it will do the most good. The pointed pockets with shaped turned over flaps are novel. You'll want to make more than one dress, because the pattern is so easy to follow and the fabrics so numerous to choose from. How about seersucker, novelty cotton, linen, crash or silk.

Household Questions

Although there is no known way to sweeten rancid fat it can be used for making soap.

• • •

Drain all boiled vegetables as soon as tender. They become soggy if they are allowed to stand unstrained after cooking. The water drained off may be saved for soup stock.

• • •

When mending a rip in the glove, button hole the two edges with a fine needle and fine thread, never silk. Now catch these threads together in a button hole stitch and you will have a neat and lasting repair.

• • •

Baking soda will keep the baby's bottles sweet. After using wash the bottles carefully in hot soapy water, sterilize by scalding, then shake in a little baking soda and fill with cold water. Let stand until bottles are used again.

The Parts Books Play in Our Lives

Books may play two different parts in the lives of men. They may build for us the walls of another and quite separate world in which we can take refuge from all that wounds and limits and frustrates us in this one. Or they may be the daily bread of our thought and action.

But whichever part they play whether they are to us the quiet garden in which the spirit dwells apart, or the fuel which feeds the active, militant mind and arms it for its encounter with hard facts, they become an integral part of the texture of our being.—Lady Violet Bonham Carter.

When Bryn went downstairs next morning there was apparently no one awake in the big house. Gary and Deborah were sure to be up, but they were not in sight. He stood for a moment on the top step, breathing in the fresh cool air, and then went around the house and down the brook toward the bridge, on his way to the engine house.

He had filled the gasoline tank in the engine and was rinsing his hands in the icy brook water when he heard a footstep on the bridge and looked up to see Deborah approaching. He stood up and dried his hands on his handkerchief. She came to stand a little above him on the raised plank, looking down at him. To his surprise, the strain of yesterday had not set a greater coldness toward him in her dark eyes. She was smiling a little at him now, her lips curving. She was smiling at him, and Grandmother was not watching. He stared at her.

"I followed you because I want to talk to you, if you don't mind," she said.

"Why, of course I don't mind. Is there something I can do?"

She hesitated. When he looked up, the long lashes had dropped and lay close to her cheek. She began to examine the moss, too. "I'm not a very nice person," she said at last. I apologized once before for being so difficult, but I don't think I tried any harder not to be difficult. I mean it, this time. You were awfully thoughtful, last night, when Grandmother was so queer and afraid. You do love her, don't you? You're quite honest about it? You would do anything to spare her pain?"

"Yes."

She nodded. "I can see that. I don't think I quite believed it until yesterday afternoon, when you came home again, and last night, when you were so troubled. I've been very selfish. I've been thinking of myself all the time, and feeling trapped, and hating it. I haven't been half as thoughtful of Grandmother as you have. I've demanded things for myself more than for her, thought about myself first, and what . . . what my position was. You haven't thought about yourself once. You haven't complained. And this isn't your problem, after all, and yet you've put yourself into such a position that if anything went wrong, you would lose most. You signed the note for Mr. Holworthy, and assumed all the financial responsibility, and you've given me your name. I didn't quite see it all until Tubby came yesterday. And he talked about your friends and then he went on and nearly ruined everything, and suddenly I saw how dreadfully unfair that would be for you, and how horrid I've been." She looked at him gravely. "Will you forgive me?"

"You haven't been horrid, Deborah. You've been . . ." Bryn began, and caught himself in time. But she did not notice.

"Yes, I have. You don't know all the things that have been going on in my mind. I'm sorry." She put her soft hand out, momentarily, and patted his, lying on the railing. Bryn did not move.

"Bryn."

"Yes. D . . . Deborah."

"Grandmother is in a strange state of mind. Last night I was very worried. I went into her room to tuck her up and kiss her good-night. She looked up at me directly and asked me if I were happy. She hasn't asked me before. Not in the same way. I think she began to suspect everybody, even me."

"Did you tell her you were happy?"

"Yes. But . . . she's going to be watching very closely for proof." She stopped. The color began to rise under her white skin. Bryn watched it, bewitched. Her eyes were lowered.

"What . . . what are we going to do about it?" he asked, lost.

"Happy with you," Deborah explained, as if he did not understand.

"Does she think I'm in love with you?"

"Yes," Deborah replied, and flushed violently. "You're a much better actor than I am. I'm sure she's beginning to suspect me."

"When you go out the door," Bryn explained, "I stand and look after you. And when I hear you coming I go to meet you. And when you're talking I keep looking at you, and when you're away I talk to her about you. I tell her how beautiful you are, how much more beautiful than any girl I ever knew, with those lovely eyes, and your lashes, as long as a dream, and your mouth, and your little white chin, and the way you blush . . . and your throat, so soft and white, and the way you move your shoulders, and the color of your hair, and the way it curls." He drew a deep breath.

"Oh, dear," she sighed. "No wonder she thinks I'm not in love with you. I haven't told her once anything about you. I've hardly mentioned you."

"Well," Bryn said after a moment, "I'll tell you. When you're in love, Deborah, you hate to be away from your . . . from your sweetheart for a second. Everything she does is perfect and lovely and sweet. You want to lift her in your arms and hold her tight against you, so close that you can hear her heart beating. You want to hear her say that she'll never leave you again, no matter what happens, that she doesn't care anything about anybody else in the world but you. And if it happened that she didn't love you," Bryn went on slowly, "there'd be a sick empty feeling where your heart ought to be, and you'd wish you were a kid again, so you could cry. But if she did love you, and she knew you weren't sure about her, she'd put her arms around you, and put her cheek against yours, and maybe even . . . kiss you."

Deborah was staring at him. After a moment she said breathlessly, "Is that the way you love your . . . your own girl?"

"Yes, Deborah."

"I don't know anything about that way of loving," she said at last. "I couldn't pretend that to Grandmother."

"No," Bryn said.

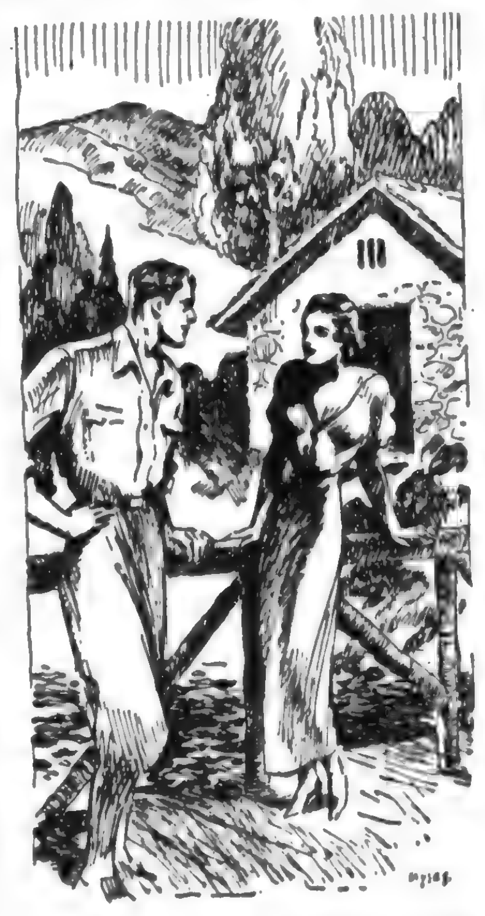
"It wasn't so much what I ought to say to Grandmother, anyway," she said. "I hadn't really thought of talking to her about you. It was the way I ought to act. I was wondering . . ."

"Yes?"

"It's really Gary's idea," she said hastily. "He came to me about it this morning. He's afraid Grandmother might get to wondering about us. You see, she thinks we . . . we love each other the way other people do when they're married," she explained.

"I suspected as much," Bryn said lightly. "Well, is there something I can do about it?"

"I'm afraid she's going to be watching for a while, anyway. Until she's satisfied. I was wondering . . . it's Gary's idea, you know. There's a little sewing room just at the head of the stairs. There's a door into my sitting room. Grandmother never goes in there; if you don't mind dreadfully, you could have it for your bedroom."



"I Don't Know Anything About That Way of Loving."

"Why, no," Bryn said calmly. "I wouldn't mind. I'd have to go out and in through your sitting room, though. Wouldn't you dislike that?"

"What I was trying to tell you when I first started to talk," she reminded him, "is that it's too late for me to keep thinking what I like and what I don't."

So it was settled.

CHAPTER VII

"If this isn't heaven," Sally sighed, looking about her in supreme content; "then don't bother to tell me I'm not dead. I don't want to be disturbed."

She sat on the cool grass in the wavering shadow of the tree against whose smooth trunk Deborah was leaning. The leaves overhead rustled softly in the faint noonday breeze. Nothing else anywhere in the whole pleasant picture spread before them moved under the white sunlight. They had congregated, all six of them, on the highest corner of the sloping lawn, the orchard behind them, a smooth stretch of sward unrolling down to the stone walls below, broken only by the bright flame of a bed of wallflowers half-way down the slope.

"Me, too," Simon muttered. He lay stretched out in the grass, his pipe in his mouth, his head on Sally's knee.

Bryn sighed. He shifted his position and moved a few inches closer to Deborah. He turned on his stomach, propped himself on his elbows and gazed up at her. A few days ago, before these others had come, and after she and Bryn had decided to be friends, she would have smiled down at him a little. It was fun to smile at Bryn, once one had started. He always looked as if he liked being smiled at. But now, Deborah pretended not to know that he was looking at her, and regarded steadily the hills far away. Because Madeline was here now, and Madeline might not like it.

A mist came into her eyes, as she thought of Madeline, and the hills swam in a noonday fog. Poor Madeline wasn't happy, for all her pretense at light-heartedness, Deborah told herself. How could she be happy, seeing Bryn married, actually married, to another girl, a girl who wore a wedding ring that he had given her, who had taken his name? Bryn was lovely. Even with Madeline here, he hadn't changed his attitude to Deborah a bit. He acted exactly as if they really were married, really loved each other, and he didn't try to keep Madeline from seeing.

Uncommon Sense ◆

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

The films of travel, which carry the vision around the world and back again have vastly broadened the horizons of millions of people, and in that respect have proved to be of high value.

Eyes Around the World

The opportunities of most people for seeing the world are very limited.

The average person in small towns and country places has a very dim idea of the length and breadth of the world, or of the people who live in places remote from him.

Today almost every boy and girl can tell you of the Taj Mahal, or of the Desert of Sahara, or the peaks of the Andes, or of life in remote cities like London, Paris and Constantinople.

* * *

Mr. Shakespeare informs us that "home-keeping youth have ever homely wits."

But "homely wits" hardly exist when practically all the people of all the civilized countries of the world can, by paying a small price for a seat in a cinema theater look 'round the world and back again."

The camera man has completely replaced the men who used to go forth and view the world and bring home pictures of it to be thrown on a still screen.

From your seat in a theater you can view the Eskimo catching a seal which will provide him with his supper and an overcoat, with a good clear glance at the peaks of the Alps or the Andes, or at "Elephants a pilin' teak" in Burmah.

* * *

Minds feed on what the eyes see.

Wherever there is anything worth seeing the camera goes.

Loving their work, and eager to bring home pictures of all the known world, these daredevils of the films are never daunted by obstacles, or by dangers.

To me it has always been astonishing that every school room in every city and village and town has not long ago been provided with cameras and screens to aid the children in their work.

Not only would they vastly broaden the view of many sections of the world, but they could, I should think, be tremendously useful in teaching such subjects as biology and zoology.

An intelligent teacher provided with a moving picture projector and a stock of films would never lack the earnest attention of her pupils.

Even pictures which only incidentally show the streets of foreign cities would be valuable. What they would do if wisely used would prové a marvel.

A Veiled Figure

THE heart of man resembles a secret chamber wherein stands—like the block of white unhewn marble set in the studio of a sculptor—a veiled figure. Though the man may not so much as lift the corner of the veil, yet he forever and in secret works to fashion and form the figure that lies beneath.

And the figure is the Soul of the man, and the unveiling thereof is called death; and until the figure be unveiled, the man scarce knoweth what manner of man he is.—Coulson Kernahan.

Found at Last

Practical Youth Is Sadly Misunderstood

"We're having stew for dinner," said the scoutmaster to the tenderfoot, "and I want you to run and fetch me a turnip from Farmer Brown's field."

"Do you want a fairly big one?" asked the tenderfoot.

"Oh, pick one about the size of your head," was the reply.

The tenderfoot started for Brown's field. About twenty minutes elapsed, then Brown came rushing into camp, greatly excited.

"Come quick with me!" he gasped. "One of your lads has gone mad, and he's pulling up all my turnips and trying his hat on them."—Tit-Bits Magazine.

200 POUNDS OF WATER A DAY... 37 TONS A YEAR

A FARM woman who has to pump by hand all of the water she uses must bend her back to the pumping and carrying of 200 pounds of water a day... this amounts to the enormous load of 37 tons a year.

Farms equipped with electrically driven pumps free the farmer's wife and daughter from this barbaric drudgery. And it is only one of the labor and time saving features which modern electrical equipment supplies the farm of today.

PROSPECTS FOR BIG CROP OF ALFALFA SEED

Reports from alfalfa growers throughout the State and observations made in the field by members of the Agronomy Division of Purdue University indicate that the second growth of alfalfa is setting seed pods much the same as in 1934 when Indiana farmers harvested 13,000 bushels of alfalfa seed ranging in yield from 2 to 6 bushels per acre. Many alfalfa growers who already have enough hay for winter feeding may find it more profitable to save the second cutting or seed instead of hay. The drouth has reduced vegetative growth, but has encouraged seed production.

When the coils or pods which bear the seed have formed, farmers should examine them to see the extent of seed formation. At the same time note should be taken of the number of pods formed as compared to the bare stems from which the flowers have dropped without pod formation taking place. Heavy podding along with seed formation gives promise of a good seed yield. It is too early to determine the quality of the seed to be produced unless the most advanced pods are far enough along to rub out the partly matured seed.

Alfalfa that is podding lightly or filling poorly with seed should be cut for hay, as it will still make a good quality of roughage, although not equal to alfalfa cut in the bloom stage. In some cases alfalfa may suffer such severe damage from grass hoppers as to be unprofitable for seed production.

The seed crop should be handled much like red clover, cut when about two thirds of the pods are dark brown. The seed shatters rapidly and so should be hulled very soon after cutting and curing, or else stored in a protected place. Windrows or bunches exposed to several rains will lose much of their seed either by shattering or by germination.

The regular clover huller may be used, but the seed threshes so easily that a grain separator equipped with proper sieves and recleaner is highly satisfactory.

The Household

◆

By LYDIA LE BARON WALKER

IT IS a good idea to go around with a screw driver and tighten screws frequently. It is amazing how many minor repairs can be avoided by doing just this very thing. Mechanical devices for labor saving are apt to have a screw or two somewhere in their mechanism, and unless these screws are kept tightened, trouble is brewing. Accidents also can be avoided by going the round of the house with the screw driver, and using it as needed.

One of the kitchen utensils that must have the screws in firmly is the coffee percolator handle. If one loses its grip, the person using the percolator, may get badly scalded. Be sure the screws in electric cord end-pieces are secure. I know of one woman who had a rather serious accident when the screws came out of the cord she was using with the electric flatiron. So don't forget to make good use of the screw driver on such screws.

Soap Screws

When a screw has to be renewed, or when the old one comes out and must be put back again, there is a little trick that will make the job easier. Soap the screw! Press the screw down into soap, and give it a little twist. Or, holding the head of the screw, just beyond the edge of the cake of soap, turn the screw around on the top of the cake, pressing the thread down enough to get it soaped. Now use the screw wherever it is wanted, and you will find that it is much easier to turn, and also it fits more securely. This is good, especially, when the screw has been used in the hole before, and is a bit loose. Screws should be very firm and tightly fitted.

There is no illumination for a dining table that is comparable to candle light. The tapers should be high enough not to intercept the vision of those looking across the table or else the candles should have shades. It is assumed in these instances, that the candles are near the center of the table. Candles that are not high, and are minus shades, can be placed nearer the edge of the table, and be satisfactory.

Number of Candles

It should be remembered that four candles are the correct number. Never use three, for three candles are too closely associated with church significances with a sad trend, to make the number suggest gaiety, and merry meals are good for the digestion. When the table is small, or where the candles are for decoration merely, and not for the sole illumination, two candles are satisfactory.

During the summer when draughts of air are wanted, candles, even the best of them, will drip when at other times they will not and the wax gets on the table. It is not the easiest thing in the world to get the wax out. If the candles are colored, the dye has been known to stain the tablecloth or centerpiece.

Candlestick Dollies

To avoid this little annoyance, let me suggest using candlestick doilies. These can be as simple as circles or squares of dull finish damask table oilcloth to match the tablecloth in color. They will be inconspicuous, and are recommended for summertime cottage use, or for dining nooks in city homes, or for eating porch meals.

Those who prefer better candlestick doilies, can make them of linen embroidered in self tones, white, or contrasting colors, with scalloped edges. Or the doilies can be plain linen, lace edged. Unless the candles are of deep or brilliant dyes, these doilies are entirely sufficient. For more precaution the circle or square of imitation damask oilcloth can be put beneath the candlestick doilies.

Paint Domes White

White and light tints do not absorb and hold heat the way darker shades do. Astronomical domes are painted white to minimize the increase in temperature in the daytime. This is done so that the scientific instruments may be maintained at a temperature as constant as possible.

Keeps Heat Out

Tests made by the Bureau of Standards show that the use of aluminum paint on the tops of automobiles, ice wagons and other vehicles reduces by about 60 per cent the amount of heat admitted through the top.

Makes Cupboard Decorative

Painting the back wall of a dish cupboard terra cotta or turquoise blue silhouettes the dishes in effective fashion.

MILK ESSENTIAL IN EVERY DIET

Nutrition Value Is Now Generally Recognized.

By EDITH M. BARBER

IT is a habit of the day to sigh for the bountifulness of a bygone time when foods were cheap and plentiful. While one and all we should appreciate lower prices for foods of all kinds, most of us would not exchange the variety, convenience, and safety which are provided today by modern methods of handling, preserving, and transporting them.

It is a satisfaction to know that most foods now available are of consistently good quality. Of all staple foods which must be used daily none is of more importance than milk, which provides so generously for the most important of the nutritional needs. With the knowledge, which is recognized as absolute by physicians, that children must have milk to grow and develop normally, it is one of the greatest responsibilities of the time to see that the milk which is provided for them is safe. It must, of course, come up to certain standards of quality so that the proper amounts of nutrients are supplied.

The first thought, however, should be that the milk is low enough in bacteria-count to be safe. While certified milk, produced under the acme of cleanly conditions, is theoretically the best milk, it is expensive and beyond the price which most persons can afford to pay. It seems unnecessary in any case when safe milk can be procured at a moderate price in the forms of pasteurized, evaporated, and dried milks. Sweetened evaporated milk is known as condensed milk and is used more largely to take the place of cream than of milk.

Modern pasteurizing-plants demand, in the first place, that the milk brought to them be clean and of good quality. They help rather than hinder the enforcement of farm-milk inspection by city or state. The process of pasteurizing reduces the bacteria-count. The manufacturers who dry or evaporate (or condense) milk are also supplied from the farms with high-quality milk, and through their processes of preparing it in concentrated form for market it is pasteurized or sterilized.

Dried milk has had the moisture removed and is put up in cans ready to beat into four times its volume of water. It has the same food value as pasteurized milk, which has usually lost nothing but part of its vitamin C content. Even when raw milk is used vitamin C must be supplied by other foods, such as tomatoes or oranges. Under the new processes of preparing dried milk its flavor is changed very little, and if chilled after beating into water it can be used for table beverage.

In the process of making it is sterilized, and for that reason is absolutely free from bacteria. The high temperature used caramelizes the milk-sugar and gives a characteristic flavor to the milk. This process, however, seems to affect none of the nutritive qualities except the vitamin C, which must be furnished in liberal quantities by other foods even when fresh milk is used. An equal amount of water added to evaporated milk will make the food value slightly above that of most market milk. It may take the place of fresh milk in any recipe.

While evaporated milk is used for cooking and for infant-feeding, it does not as a rule furnish a table-beverage in the same sense that fresh milk does. It does, however, make a delicious drink when it is mixed with fruit-juices or with chocolate sirup and frapped with ice in a shaker. The fact that evaporated milk will whip if directions are followed, makes it possible to use it instead of cream in gelatin desserts, and for that reason is most useful where whipped cream is at a premium.

Cream of Tomato Soup

2 cups canned tomatoes
1 teaspoon sugar
2 slices onion
3 cloves
1 bay-leaf
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
Pepper
1-4 teaspoon soda
1 1-2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
3-4 cup evaporated milk
3-4 cup water
1-2 cup grated cheese

Cook tomatoes and seasoning together 10 minutes, and strain. Add soda and stir until dissolved. Melt the butter, add the flour, and stir until thick and smooth. Add the tomato mixture, repeat, but do not allow to boil. Serve at once with grated cheese and crackers, or croutons or toasted bread sticks.

Chocolate-Walnut Drops

1-2 pound sweet chocolate
1-2 cup condensed milk
1 cup dates
1-2 cup walnut-meats

Melt the chocolate with the milk in a double boiler. Remove from the fire, stir until smooth, and add the walnuts and dates. Drop by teaspoonfuls on a greased baking-sheet and bake for 20 minutes in a slow oven (275 degrees F.) until firm. This amount will make 24 cakes.

Uncommon Sense ◆

Don't Watch the Thermometer

I am writing this on a hot day—a very hot day. The thermometer on my porch informs me that it is a hundred degrees Fahrenheit. I could believe that it is very much hotter than that.

The people that pass my door have taken off their coats—if they are men.

The women, who refuse to be beaten even if they can't really keep cool, are wearing filmy raiment, but they don't pant the way men do.

But while I admit that I am inconvenienced, and wish I could be in Alaska and lean against an ice floe like a polar bear, I know that if I stop thinking about the weather and go to work I will soon lose myself in my job.

* * *

A little way down the street is a fire-engine house. The firemen have rigged a pipe up in front of the building and from its mouth spouts a continuous man-made geyser. All the children in the neighborhood, and they make as much noise as all the children in town, are stripped to their little buffs and are shouting joyfully as they bend down their backs and let the spray from the pipe run over them.

Every time there is a lull in the proceedings to change children—for there are too many of them to soak all at once—a flock of sparrows alight to have their turn at the cooling process.

* * *

But in the suburban town where I live, and in the great city which is not far away, men and women are doing their regular work.

If a fire should break out in another part of the town, the firemen who are now watching the children enjoy their shower baths would mount their ladder trucks and man their engines, and be off with a blare of sirens to do their appointed job.

If they decided they didn't want to get any hotter and stayed where they were perhaps the town might be consumed.

* * *

Men and women can do in a pinch what they have to do, whether the temperature is up or down.

When the need arises, especially the need to help others out of danger, their courage crops out and they all become heroes for the time being.

And I, who have nothing to do for the present but pound a typewriting machine would do well to forget the fact that it is uncomfortable, and stop breathing hard and making continuous trips to the refrigerator for ice cubes to fill my glass.

* * *

Rain or snow, cold or hot, one is easier in his mind if he forgets the discomforts that are bound to come, and to continue with his work.

And the more indispensable work he has to do, the more easily he will withstand the steaming streets and the torrid skies.

As long as it is not humanly possible to change the weather, the only intelligent thing to do is to forget about it.

—15—

That night, as usual, Deborah went into Grandmother's room to make sure that she was settled comfortably, and to kiss her good-night. Grandmother was sitting up in her big bed, her silvery hair brushed smooth and drawn back into a neat little braid.

"Deborah."

"Yes, Grandmother?"

"Do you not like these friends of Bryn's, my darling?"

Deborah looked up in surprise. "Why, yes. Yes, of course. I think they are lovely. Sally is sweet. She is like a talking doll. And she is very kind."

"And Madeline?"

"Nobody could help liking Madeline," Deborah replied. "She's charming, isn't she, Grandmother? I love to hear her talk. It's so slow and lazy. It's because she and Simon are from Texas, Sally says. And Madeline is beautiful. Don't you think she's beautiful, Grandmother?"

"Not as beautiful as you are, my child," Grandmother answered fondly. "But she is very attractive." She was silent again. Then, "If you like them, Deborah, and find them pleasant company, what is it that has been troubling you ever since they arrived?"

"Troubling me?" Deborah answered, startled. "But . . . I am not troubled."

"Oh, Deborah," Grandmother said reproachfully.

Deborah raised her eyes, and there was a deep, happy smile in them.

"I am happy, Grandmother darling," she said.

"And you love Bryn? He loves you, of that I am sure. But of your love for him . . . sometimes I am not so sure. You admire him? You think him strong and thoughtful and quick, and kind?"

"Yes, Grandmother."

"You respect him? You are proud of whatever he does?"

"Yes, Grandmother."

"And," she put her hand out gently and lifted Deborah's chin. "Why, you are blushing, child! Surely that ought to be sufficient answer to my next question, but I must have your words, Deborah. Forgive me. But you know your complete happiness means everything to me. Deborah, tell me; when you see him, and he smiles that twinkling smile of his, don't you want to go to him, and caress his cheek, as you are caressing mine, and put your hand on his hair, and touch his shoulder? Isn't that what you'd like to do, Deborah?"

Deborah caught her breath. Her eyes darkened. Her lips quivered faintly. And then, "Yes, Grandmother," she said.

"Of course," Grandmother said happily. "Well, then you love him. You couldn't help loving him. Go, my child. Kiss me good-night, and leave me. I shall rest, tonight. I am happy."

Out in the hall, safely away from the door, Deborah stood and put both her hands over her face. Her brain was whirling. There was a dreadful lump in her throat, and something ached in her breast. Alone in the darkness, she stood, trying to calm herself, trying to be cool and uncaring again.

A voice spoke to her. It was Bryn. He was in the hall beside her. He was whispering, so as not to disturb Grandmother.

"Deborah," he was saying anxiously, "Deborah, what has happened?"

Deborah did not answer. Instead, she dropped her hands and stared up through the shadows at his face. He drew a quick breath, then put his arms out and held her close to him. His coat was rough under her cheek.

"Deborah, sweetheart," he said brokenly, "what's happened to you? Why are you trembling?"

For only a second she lay there, and then she lifted her head and pulled herself away. "Don't touch me," she said in a furious whisper. "Oh, don't you dare to touch me!" and she flew down the stairs and out to the others, sitting talking in the welcome darkness of the veranda.

* * *

Deborah sat on the couch before the long balcony window in her own sitting room. The afternoon was very hot. Bryn and Tubby and Simon had gone following the brook, looking for a pool to swim in.

There was a knock at her door. Deborah ran quick fingers over her eyes. Her heart bumped. She scrambled from the couch, preparing to dash into her bedroom before calling out to Bryn that he might go through to his own room. It was not Bryn. Sally's voice floated plaintively through the keyhole. "Deborah! May we come in?"

"Oh," Deborah said limply, and then, "Yes, of course, Sally. Please do. And she tightened her dressing gown around her.

Sally, in floating black chiffon pyjamas and tiny black mules, came through the door, followed by Madeline in dull green. "Were you sleeping?" Sally inquired. "Curl yourself up again, Deborah. Everything about you is like the Sleeping Beauty herself," Sally said.

Deborah looked at Sally. "I think you're sweet, too, Sally," she said shyly.

Sally flew up from her chair, flung her arms around Deborah and kissed her. "That was darling," she said. "Wasn't that darling, Madeline?"

Madeline sighed. "Yes," she agreed. "But you don't need it. You've got Simon. You don't have to suffer in silence and alone, as I do."

Sally began to laugh. "You don't exactly go around languishing, you know, idiot," she said.

Madeline sighed. "Not outwardly, perhaps. But inwardly, I suffer."

"Piffle," Sally answered. She turned to Deborah. "Does she look as if she were suffering?"

"Not exactly," Deborah said faintly.

"She isn't, either. She knows perfectly well it's all a question of time. And, I must say, Madeline, it looks much more hopeful lately than it ever did. Doesn't it?"

Deborah couldn't stand it any longer. "Does she mean she's . . . in love . . . with somebody?" she asked faintly.

"Tubby," Sally answered. "Can you imagine it?"

"Tubby?"

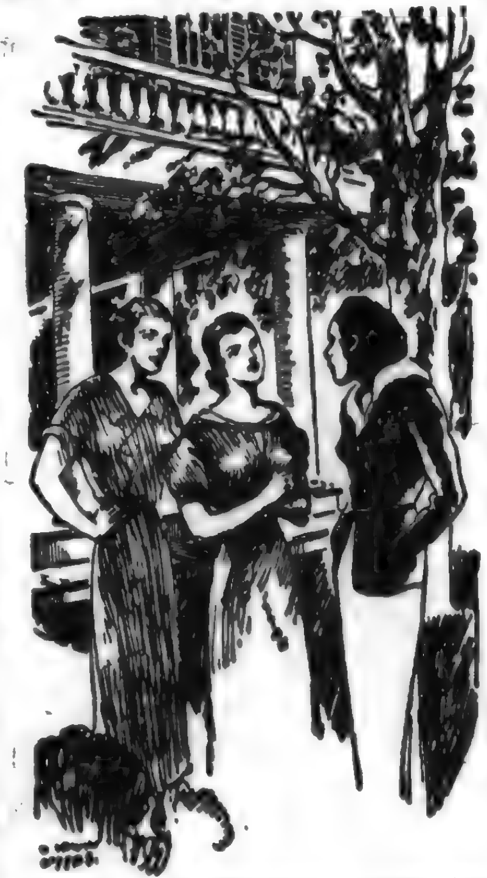
"Tubby. Isn't it ridiculous?"

"I don't see anything ridiculous about it," Madeline objected. "He may not be what one would call a romantic figure, I admit. He is a number of pounds overweight, but he's very good-tempered. And his hair won't lie flat; but I always liked originality. And I like his dimple and I'm crazy about his lisp. I could listen to him forever, if only he'd say a few of the right things. Deborah, honestly now, don't you think Tubby's a dear?"

Deborah was still staring at her. Now she gave a deep sigh and sank back against the couch. "Yes," she said. "Yes. I think he's wonderful. I think he's marvelous. I think he's just as nice as he can be."

CHAPTER VIII

It had been a happy afternoon, the happiest afternoon, Deborah decided, that she had ever known. The four of them, Sally and Simon and she and Bryn, had gone for a walk in the pine woods up on the hill. At first she had walked beside Sally, but Sally had obviously wanted to be with Simon, and Deborah had dropped back and walked with Bryn. He could see how it was, that she wasn't thrusting herself upon him, that it was a matter of necessity, and he didn't seem to mind. As a matter of fact, Deborah said to herself, sitting on the veranda in the twilight, he had seemed to enjoy himself. He had climbed a steep overhanging little cliff once when she had seen a brilliant tiger-lily up in the shadow, and had brought it down to her triumphantly. When he gave it to her their hands had touched, and he had stood for a moment looking down at her with a queer expression that made her heart turn over when she remembered. She had wanted to smile at him then, Deborah recalled, but something had made her draw away hastily, and as she moved, his expression had changed again, and he had begun to talk quickly.



"She's a Horrible Nasty Scheming Vampire."

Deborah could not take her eyes from Bryn's. It seemed to her that in his there was a question that she had to answer. She gazed at him, so strong and fine, sitting there against the pillar. A kind of tense look that was constantly in his face during these last few days began to relax. Then he put his hand out slowly and covered hers, lying beside her on the chair.

"No, no," she said in a whisper, but she couldn't draw her hand away, and she didn't know what it was she meant.

He lifted her hand gently until it was against his lips; his eyes were still on hers, gentle, compelling. But she was afraid; she drew her hand away swiftly and sprang from her chair. "Isn't that . . . isn't that the car?" she said breathlessly.

It was. Madeline and Tubby had been to town, and when Madeline came up to the veranda Bryn inquired about mail.

"There was a letter for Tubby from Pilar," Madeline replied.

Sally stopped dead. She looked up at Madeline in horror. "From Pilar?" she repeated.

"Who is Pilar?" Deborah inquired.

Sally and Madeline looked at each other. Then they both coughed together. "Just a girl," Madeline said nonchalantly, but Sally at the same moment said, "She's a horrible nasty scheming vampire, that's what she is, and I hate her."

"The Man Who-O-O"
Tales and Traditions from American Political History
BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ROOSTER CROW

THE Gooding tavern in Greenfield, Ind., has long since disappeared but it deserves to be remembered as the birthplace of a familiar emblem of one of the major political parties, a symbol that is still in use after nearly a century.

Back in the thirties it was owned by Joseph Chapman, an ardent Democrat, who had the habit of imitating a rooster when exulting over victories by his party. So when his political enemies won, they taunted him by shouting: "Now crow, Chapman, crow!"

In 1840 Chapman was a candidate for the state legislature from Hancock county. In that year Democratic prospects were far from bright. The country still remembered the panic of 1837 and blamed President Van Buren for it. Moreover, the "singing Whigs" were making a powerful appeal to the voters with their shouts of "Tippecanoe and Tyler, Too!" and their log cabin and hard cider symbols.

In the midst of the campaign George Pattison, editor of the Indianapolis Constitution, wrote a letter to William Sebastian of Greenfield in which he said: "I have been informed by a Democrat that in one part of your county 30 Van Buren men have turned for Harrison. Please let me know if such be the fact. I think such a deplorable state of facts can not exist. If so I will visit Hancock and address the people relative to the policy of the Democratic party. I have not time to spare, but I will refuse to eat or sleep or rest so long as anything can be done. Do, for heaven's sake, stir up the Democracy. See Chapman, tell him not to do as he did heretofore. He used to create unnecessary alarms; he must crow; we have much to crow over. I will insure this county to give a Democratic majority of 200 votes. Spare no pains."

This letter accidentally fell into the hands of the Whigs and was published in an Indianapolis paper with a view to ridiculing the Democrats. But it proved to be a boomerang for the Whigs. "Crow, Chapman, crow!" became the slogan of the Indiana Democrats and spread all over the country.

When the Indiana Sentinel was launched in 1841 it carried at the top of its front page the picture of a proud rooster and under it was the slogan "Crow, Chapman, crow!" Other Democratic newspapers began carrying the same picture and slogan and soon the rooster, crowing proudly whether in victory or defeat, became the accepted symbol of the Democratic party. Despite the later popularity of the donkey, it is still a favorite symbol—thanks to John Chapman of Greenfield, Ind., who taught his fellow-Democrats how to crow.

WINNING WITH BUCKEYES

WHEN Martin Van Buren, bosom friend and successor to fiery Andrew Jackson, undertook to succeed himself in the White House in the race of 1840 something new in political history was the result.

Van Buren not only was defeated. He insured the election of Gen. William Henry Harrison of Ohio and he endowed Ohio with the name of the Buckeye state, which flourishes today.

It all came about when the cry was taken up by Van Buren's campaigners that Harrison was more perfectly fitted to live in a log cabin and drink hard cider than to go to Washington as the nation's head.

What a boomerang that proved to be!

The only background for the attack was that when the hero of Tippecanoe retired from battle he selected a site overlooking the Ohio river in the southwestern part of the state, built a double log house and finished it with shining white clapboards.

Ohioans naturally resented the slur on their habits of living, including the charge of tippling. Miniature log cabins, symbolic of pioneer life and the vigor which pushed civilization westward from the more effete east, made their appearance throughout the state.

These cabins were reproduced from buckeye logs. So were the canes carried by thousands of marchers who participated in parades to advance the candidacy of Harrison. The cabins were mounted on wagons and within each was a horny-handed frontiersman, quaffing hard cider.

Van Buren was not neglected while this was going on. He was attacked by the Ohioans as a snob with a penchant for European customs.

By the time the "Buckeye" parades popularized and spread east of the Alleghenies, Van Buren's managers realized their mistake and tried in vain to stem the tide. It was too late. Gen. Harrison won the election, hands down, and Ohio has been known ever since as the Buckeye State.

Memorial to Crusoe

The government of Chile has decided to make a national park of Robinson Crusoe's island in the Pacific, Juan Fernandez.

The cave where lived Alexander Selkirk, the original of Robinson Crusoe, the lookout from which he watched for passing ships, and his other associations will now be in the care of keepers, and guides will be available for visitors to the island.

Alexander Selkirk, the son of a Scots shoemaker, ran away to sea and rose to be sailing master in one of Captain Dampier's privateers in the South Seas. In September, 1704, he quarreled with his captain and had himself landed with his effects on the uninhabited island of Juan Fernandez. He lived there till January, 1709, when Captain Wodes Rogers took him on board.

Captain Rogers told his story in a book three years later, and it was mostly from this account that Defoe built up his immortal story for boys.

DID you ever stop to think WHY so many smart operators are changing to Ford V-8 Trucks? If you have, you have probably discovered that these men buy on FACTS, not guesswork. Attention:
Mr. Ben Sherwood

Dear Sir:

After testing several makes of cars and trucks, I have found the New Ford V-8 to be the trucks and cars for my business.

My Fords are always ready to go even in the sub-zero weather. Last winter we were able to make our regular deliveries and on time, while some of our competitors, with other makes of trucks were unable to make their deliveries.

I have just placed an order with the Sherwood Chastain Auto Co. here for another V-8 pick up, which brings my fleet up to five, ALL FORDS.

Yours very respectfully,

Shakamak State Park To Be Scene Of Second Annual A. A. U. Mid-States Swimming Meet Aug. 15-16

Swimming and diving stars from Indiana and neighboring states will participate in the 1936 A. A. U. Mid-States Swimming Championships to be held at Shakamak State Park, near Jasonville, on August 15-16. Besides drawing a number of the outstanding aquatic stars, the meet is expected to attract thousands of spectators and special parking spaces are being arranged.

A regulation course for the swimming events is being completed in front of the wide beach and the bluff on which the bathing pavilion is located. The events of the two days will be run under A. A. U. regualtions and supervision, making any records eligible for official recognition. Department of Conservation officials are co-operating with the Jasonville Industrial Bureau in arranging the meet.

Shakamak state park is located on Roads 48 and 159, two miles west of Jasonville, 12 miles ndrth of Linton and 30 miles southeast of Terre Haute. One of the major attractions of the park is the 55-acre artificial lake in which the meet will be staged. The lake is well-stocked with game fish and a number of large bass have been taken there this season. Picnic and camping areas are located in attractive wooded sections of the park and have shelter houses, convenient water supplies and sanitary facilities for visitor.s

A second artificial lake has been completed recently and a series of hatchery ponds built. These ponds will provide game fish for stocking the two park lakes. Well-fenced corrals hold buffalo, deer and elk while an aviary is stocked with game birds and waterfowl. Many visitors enjoy a trip into the coal mine where they can see the layers of coal in the ground. One of the most attractive hiking trails in the park encircles the lake while park drivers take the motorist to all points of interest.

Partially furnished cottages on a wooded bluff bordering the lake are popular settings for vacations while meals and refreshments are available at the pavilion.

Shakamak state park was established in 1929 on land given by Clay, Green and Sullivan counties and has an area of 1,021 acres.

Wheat Imports Jump Rapidly

United States Now Buys 40 Million Bushels From Other Nations.

By FRANK RIDGWAY

Gears of international trade machinery have been thrown in reverse to the extent that the United States is today the world's largest wheat importer, with the single exception of Great Britain, including North Ireland. In that regrettable position this nation has imported from foreign countries more than 40 million bushels of wheat within the past year.

For at least 70 years, this country had been a net exporter of wheat. A dozen years ago, farmers bragged about selling to foreign countries more than 259 million bushels of wheat in one year, exceeding the exports of any other country in the world. Today, they are forced to stand by and watch foreign growers sell wheat to America's customers abroad. They also are supplying a large part of the market here at home.

Government Tinkering

This revolutionary change has been brought about not only by drouths, but also by government tinkering with production and foreign trade policies. Had there been no government meddling, our growers would have had more wheat to sell during the next 12 months when prices are expected to be higher than they have been for several years.

After three years experience under a crop and livestock production program dictated to them by officials of a centralized government, many practical farmers feel that they would have done a better job acting individually. They must pay their share of the New Deal dole money sent out to individual farmers for reducing their production which has contributed to the present predicament.

Farmers had been told by political planners that the reduced production of farm products, brought about by adverse weather conditions and by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program, had been good for them. As they now stand looking backward, each farmer is better able to appraise for himself what the drouth and the Agricultural Adjustment Administration did for him and decide as an individual whether it has been good or bad.

Pay Higher Prices

Producers, working under various handicaps, are now threshing a wheat crop estimated to be approximately 638 million bushels, more than 145 million bushels less than the five-year average from 1929 to 1933. It will again be necessary for the United States to bring in large quantities of hard wheat to blend with soft wheat during the next year. Our millers will be forced to pay a higher price plus 42 cents a bushel duty because Canada's wheat crop is short.

When the wheat drills start this fall, many United States growers are expected to make their own decisions as to the number of acres they will plant and encourage their neighbors to do likewise.

Lincoln, Landon Have Same Initials

Mrs. Wilma D. Hoyal, assistant chairman of the Republican National Committee, isn't superstitious, but she points out that Abe Lincoln and Alf Landon have the same initials.

"Abe Lincoln," says Mrs. Hoyal, "brought our country through its greatest crisis in the 19th century. If there is any significance in this repetition, Alf Landon surely will be elected to do the same for us in the 20th century."

LANDON DOES IT AGAIN!

Topeka, Kas.—Gov. Alf M. Landon has balanced his budget again! When Kansas closed its fiscal year June 30, there was on hand a cash balance of approximately $1,250,000, according to the estimate of A. R. Jones, state accountant. This is nearly a quarter of a million dollars more than the cash balance at the close of the 1935 fiscal year.

U. S. Is Far in Red as 1936 Fiscal Year Closes

WASHINGTON, D. C.—This was the record of the Roosevelt administration as the fiscal year 1936 came to a close June 30:

A federal debt of 33 billion 913 million dollars.

Spending of 8 billion 793 million dollars during the fiscal year, more than two dollars for every one taken in.

A budget bureau estimate of expenditures of $8,272,554,370 during the new fiscal year, without any alibi such as the veteran's bonus or invalidation of processing taxes.

A federal debt that would be 38 billion 600 million were it not for expert juggling of the figures by the New Deal treasury department, which does not include in its estimate a total of $4,688,733,645 in government guaranteed bonds. Reason given for the omission of the bonds is that some day they will all be repaid, a conclusion which is at least arbitrary.

Knox Will Be Notified in Chicago on July 30

Washington, D. C.—Col. Frank Knox, Republican nominee for the vice-presidency as Gov. Alf. M. Landon's running mate, will accept the nomination in Chicago July 30, John D. M. Hamilton, fiery, red-haired young chairman of the Republican National committee, announced here. This will be one week, to the day, following the notification of Gov. Landon.

More Federal Jobs

In 1932 the civilian employees of the federal government numbered 583,196. President Roosevelt proposed to reduce the number by at least 25 per cent, but in March of 1936 the number of civilian employees was 806,035, an increase of 222,859.

No Politics in Relief

In Mamaroneck, New York, a relief canvas showed that 24 out of 27 executive or supervisory jobs were held by Democrats. But—Republican voters out-number the Democrats 3 to 1.

PRECIOUS WATER FOR CROPS

Other farmers may pray for rain but M. S. Caldwell, R. R. 4, South Bend, Indiana, supplies his 10-acre tract on the Mayflower Road with water from a deep well. Jack Caldwell, a son of Mr. Caldwell, is shown with a hose guiding the flow of water from one of the distribution pipes to the thirsty plants. Crops on this tract are thriving despite the extreme heat and drought. Nearly 1,000,000 gallons of water have been pumped during the last six weeks.

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Receipts in all departments were larged than for any week since last winter.

Hogs: It looked as tho there might be more feeder shoats offered than the buyers could take but all were taken at prices only slightly lower per head than last week. A large supply of fat hogs found ready sale at from $10.90 to $11.15 with roughs at from $7.40 to $8.50 and boars from $4.50 to $5.00. Sows with pigs at heel $5 per head lower than a week ago.

Sheep: Lambs were sold on a better market than any other kind of livestock this week. Most of the offerings ran towards the feeder type rather than slaughter quality with the best taken without a hard sort at $8.70 to $8.85. Breeding ewes, selling by the head at $2.50 to $4.75 and buck lambs at $8.60 down.

Calves: Owing to poor pasture and high prices for dairy products the majority of veals are of poor quality, however there is a good demand for calves weighing over 80 and showing fat, these sold at $8.60 and there was not enough to go around. Bucket fed and grass calves changed hands slowly at much lower prices the bulk going from $4.50 to $7.75.

Cattle: Dairy cows are selling slightly lower than last week, dairy products remain high but many farmers are offering their milk cows for sale on account of the scarcity of feed. As a rule good dairy cows sold about five to eight dollars lower than like quality would have brought last week changing hands at $35.00 to $64 per head. Young pasture cattle are being bought by dealers at from one to three dollars per head cheaper than last week; in spite of heavy receipts we have a good demand and our prices are higher than terminal markets quote. Butcher cows sold as follows: low cutters and canners $2.75 to $3.40 with better grades up to $3.90 and $4.00. Steers on grass and grain $4.50 to $6.50, heifers $5 to $6.40. Bulls $4.00 to $5.00.

Clifty Falls State Park, Overlooking The Ohio River Combines Many Attractions for Visitors

High above the winding Ohio and overlooking the roofs of Madison, Clifty Falls state park has an unusual combination of attractions for the visitor, only two of which are pictured above—the Poplar Grove Shelter house and the falls in Clifty Creek. This is one of Indiana's most popular state parks, drawing a high percentage of its attendance from the neighboring states, Ohio and Kentucky.

With one entrance on Road 56, just west of Madison and one from Road 107, north of the city, the pack is easily accessible over improved, modern highways from any section of the state. A part of the charm of a trip to Clifty Falls is the scenic beauty of the landscape in this, one of the first-settled sections of Indiana. The park was established in 1920 and has an area of 617 acres.

In Indina's unglaciated area the park has many deep, wooded, ravines and lofty ridges which give all the atmosphere of a mountainous country. From lookout points on the hills the visitor gets glimpses of the river and occasionally of a smoke-plumed steamboat. The distant hills of Kentucky and at night the lignts of scattered dwellings make a picture long to be remembered.

Here the visitor finds exceptional provision for his outing. The Poplar Grove shelter, shown above, is located in one of the attractive picnic areas which have outdoor ovens and firewood for cooking, a convenient supply of water, sanitary facilities and tables and benches for scores of groups. The camping area where the visitor may pitch his tent or park his trailer, is equally attractive and well-equipped. For those who prefer, hotel accommodations are available at Clifty Inn.

The park takes its name from the falls in Clifty Creek. This stream has cut deep into the rock and geologists say that at one time the falls were on the banks of the Ohio River. From vantage points along the canyon and from the boulder-strewn floor, visitors discover a variety of striking views of the falls.

On the wooded hillsides, particularly beautiful when touched with autumn frosts, are many species of trees and plants among which birds and wildlife fine sanctuary. A nature guide aids in the study of birds and plants, and points out the many places of interest.

BUDGETS ARE NOW BEING PUBLISHED

The budgets or tax levies for the various taxing units are now being published for the inspection of the taxpayers in the particular units, and will be run for two issues so that there will be no excuse for taxpayers not knowing.

Last week we began with Stafford township, E. D. Webster, Trustee, and the publication is concluded with today's issue.

St. Joe Town, Concord, Spencer and Newville township budgets appear today for the first time and will be concluded next issue, and the Boards will adopt the levies on September 1, as advertised, unless they find reasons for lowering. St. Joe Town Board will pass on its levy on September 7, its next regular meeting night.

Readers are asked to study these proposals carefully.

Hope Will Direct G.O.P. Farm Group

Agricultural Division to Work With Township Committees.

Chicago.—Practical farmers will take an active part in directing the Republican campaign in rural areas, Congressman Clifford D. Hope of Garden City, Kas., announced in assuming the directorship of the Farm Division of the Republican National Committee.

In each agricultural state, an advisory council is to be set up. This council is to be composed of practical "dirt" farmers who will supply the basic suggestions for the campaign.

Three assistant directors have been appointed to aid Congressman Hope. They are Don L. Berry of Indianola, Iowa, publisher of the Indianola Record; E. H. Taylor of Yates Center, Kansas, for 12 years assistant editor of The Country Gentleman, and Congressman Francis D. Culkin of Oswego, New York, an authority on dairying and active in legislation affecting dairy farmers.

"The Republican farm campaign is going to have its roots out in the farm districts," said Congressman Hope. "The farmers themselves will tell us what they want and how they feel about things."

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Total receipts for this week's sale were 387 head as compared to 376 for a week ago. In spite of unusually hot weather it was the largest sale this year.

Hogs: 160 to 230, $10.85 to $11.20; 140 to 160, $10.50 to $10.70; roughs $7.80 to $8.60. Feeder pigs selling by the head steady with last week by the head sales being equal to $11.00 to $12.00 per pound. Sows with litters seemed a shade higher than last sale, selling at steady prices with a good demand.

Lambs: Lambs reflected some of the drop in terminal prices this week and sold a little hard at $8.50 to $8.60 for the best grass and grain kinds with thin lambs at $7.00 to $7.50. Slaughter ewes brought $1.50 to $3.00, bucks $1.75.

Calves: Calves continue to come on the market in poor condition for the most part. The best of the offerings brought from $8.25 to a top of $8.60 thin kinds were quotable down to $4.50 and $5.75.

Cattle: Trading in cattle was slow this week and with full pens an unseasonable warm weather it came nearer being a buyer's market than for months. Recently fresh and springer cows sold from $38.00 to $60.00 per head. Thin pasture heifers, showing prospects of becoming good dairy cows next year were in better demand than any thing else in the cattle pens; selling by the head higher than last week and without much regard to a by the pound value. It was unusual for fat grass steers and heifers to bring $5.00 per cwt. this week altho some sales were slightly above this mark. Slaughter cows showed the drop in prices more than other kinds selling at least 25c below last week. Thin cutter cows $1.75 to $1.85, low cutters and cutters, weighing 800 to 950 $3.00 to $3.50. A few sales of unusually good roan and red cows were made at from $4.50 to $5.00. Several city buyers stated that the offering of butcher cows this week was the best quality we have ever had on sale. Good bulls brot $5.00 to $5.10.

GANG SPIRIT BROKEN BY PAL BEING HURT

The young Americans, of St. Joe, were bent on playing cowboy or gangster last week, carrying home made pistols in both hands and others strapped on their sides. The guns were made of wood and a clothespin used as a hammer. A rubber was stretched along the barrel and fastened at the hammer, and when ready were released by pressing the pin down, the enemy receiving a terrific "ker-whallop." This continued for days and gangs were seen in all parts of town, darting in and out of places. Some of the gangs would be captured and possibly lose their weapons.

Anyway, Robert Ridgway was engaged in sawing out a gun at his home last week, and he sawed into his left arm, making a gash which took six stitches to close. He was rushed to their Auburn doctor by Jiggs Keeler. Monday the stitches were removed and he is doing fine.

The gang spirit is at a rather low ebb this week.

HARVEST CAMPAIGN INCREASES FORD SALES

Sales of Ford V-8 cars, trucks and commercial cars in Indiana and Illinois have been greatly stimulated by the "harvest" campaign launched by Ford dealers July 1, according to R. A. Hayes, manager of the Ford Motor Company Indianapolis branch.

Awards for leading Ford dealers in the form of all-expense trips to the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas, Texas, and cash prizes for new and used car salesmen are responsible for much of the current stimulation in Ford sales, he said. The campaign opened July 1 and will close September 30.

"Presentation of Ford V-8 cars with the new interior treatment, both in standard and de luxe body types; the announcement of the new de luxe equipment for Ford V-8 trucks and the current "Scottie" car demonstration of Ford V-8 economy also have had much to do with the way in which Ford sales are showing the present contraseasonal upturn," said Mr. Hayes.

"We are also feeling the effects of the increasing momentum in Ford sales which became apparent in June when retail sales throughout the United States were the largest for any June since 1930. These developments are certain to exert a growing influence as the present 'harvest' campaign progresses."

At last report, he remains unconscious most of the time.

By some means, the less informed musicians of the country have been set mad in a search for genuine Stradivarius violins, and hundreds are under the mistaken impression that they have discovered an instrument of that kind, The world will be best served when everybody arrives at the conclusion that his own particular fiddle presents nothing out of the ordinary, and then sets himself to the task of playing as good a tune as possible upon it.

Charles Coburn, of St. Joe, a young man under treatment at the Dr. J. A. Sanders hospital, in Auburn, for injuries in an automobile crackup, is much better. The accident occurred midway between Auburn and Concord when the car in which he was riding struck a telephone pole. The car was driven by Ned Shull and was ditched on account of dust. Ned received cuts about the face, but was released from the hospital in a couple of days, and has been about since.

HOW THE BANKS AID THE GOVERNMENT

Normal and Emergency Needs Met by Advances of Commercial Banking Credit

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J. — The American commercial banking credit system is an absolute essential in the financial operations of business and government, Harold G. Moulton, President of the Brookings Institution of Washington, D. C., said here recently in an address before the Graduate School of Banking conducted under the joint auspices of Rutgers University and the American Bankers Association.

If the flexibility and expansibility provided by commercial banking credit were eliminated, Dr. Moulton declared, "it is scarcely too much to say that the economic system itself would shortly be destroyed.

"Normally the amount of credit extended by commercial banks to the government is small in amount and for the purpose mainly of financing temporary requirements in anticipation of tax collections or bond sales. But in periods of war and acute depression, when the financial requirements of government expand with great rapidity, the expansion of commercial bank credit is on a tremendous scale. Such is the case at the present time.

How Public Needs Are Financed

"The purchase of government securities by individuals and by the commercial banks provides the government with the means by which its manifold activities are financed. The Treasury obtains the funds, with which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and other government credit agencies finance their operations, through the sale of securities, largely to commercial banks. These funds, in turn, have gone to the assistance of distressed banks and other financial institutions, to aid industrial and agricultural enterprises, to finance new public and private capital construction, and to provide relief to the unemployed."

Dr. Moulton declared that it is not true that the world depression was caused by a breakdown of the American banking system "which did not, in fact, occur until the depression had been under way for more than three years." He added:

"Nor is it true that the world maladjustments existing in 1929 can be explained simply by undue extensions of commercial banking credit in the preceding years. These maladjustments involved world agricultural, industrial, commercial and financial relations."

FARM ACCOUNTING REVEALS LESSONS

Principles of Sound Business Management That Apply to All Farms

An analysis made of detailed records kept by a group of Wisconsin farms revealed several important lessons and the principles of sound business management derived from them apply equally well to other farms, says an article in the Bulletin of the Agricultural Commission of the American Bankers Association. The article says:

"Investment costs, including interest, depreciation, repairs, taxes and insurance, are approximately two-thirds of all farm costs. Furthermore, these costs are largely independent of the production program of the farm.

"This means that if a farmer cuts his production of crops or livestock, he increases his investment costs per unit of product produced, as a smaller number of units must then carry as large an expense load as before. This illustrates the importance, from the standpoint of costs, of operating a farm at or near capacity.

"Investment mistakes are more costly than many others because they cannot easily be corrected. If a farmer pays too much for his farm, his investment costs will be abnormally high as long as he owns it. If he constructs a $4,000 barn, when a $2,000 barn would have served his purpose, he will have excessive barn costs, year after year, during the entire service life of the structure.

"This emphasizes the importance of a knowledge of investment values and the specific investment requirements of individual farms.

Determining Real or False Economies

"In working for greater economy, it is essential that the farm manager be able to distinguish between a real and a false saving. This can be done only through a careful estimate of the contribution to income, over a period of time, of each item of expenditure. Only if more is saved in expense than will be lost in income, can a contemplated cut in expense be designated as a real saving.

"For example, dropping dairy herd improvement work may result in a yearly expense reduction. The question to decide is what effect the dropping of this work will have on the present and future income from the dairy herd. If the estimated loss in livestock receipts due to a lowered efficiency in feeding and breeding is greater than the original saving, then it would obviously be a false economy.

"Substantial savings can be effected on many farms through the use of more home grown garden produce and farm cured meats. Why pay out money for products of this kind that can be produced much cheaper at home? The money saved from the family food budget can be used for the purchase of many things that will make the farm home a more comfortable and pleasant place to live."

HISTORICAL PAGEANT TO BE BIG FEATURE OF ST. JOE VALLEY FESTIVAL

The Historical Pageant to be given on Friday night, the opening night of the St. Joe Valley Festival, will be the first and perhaps the biggest feature of the whole three-day celebration. The Pageant opens with the entrance of Miss St. Joe Valley and her eighteen attendants (six from each of the three townships,) and address of welcome.

Then follows the ten episodes of the Pageant depicting scenes ranging from the discovery of The Valley, coming of the Jesuit priests, first church, early means of education, early wars, coming of Mad Anthony Wayne, pioneer wedding, Spirit of '61, and changes in transportation.

Rehearsals by the different groups are already well under way and we predict one of the biggest events held in The Valley Community in years.

CHANGE MADE IN BUSINESS ORGANIZATION

The business formerly owned by Paul H. Schunk, Inc., has been taken over by Modern Auto Sales & Service, without any change in personnel. The new company will continue to serve the public and hope for a continuance of the very liberal patronage accorded them.

25,000 Loaves Rot in One Field

Carrollton, Ill.—Many sections of the West are scared by the effects of the drought, but Greene County in this state presents scenes of growing crop destruction as a result of "planned economy through scarcity."

The Carrollton Patriot reports that 25,000 potential loaves of bread are rotting in a field at the west end of the city limits, alongside route 108.

Last fall, Meade Keeley, owner of the field, signed up for the Roosevelt crop reduction program. He had already sown his wheat before signing a contract which provided that he should reduce his production by 17 acres.

This 17-acre field was not harvested in the usual manner. Mr. Keeley cut the wheat and let it lie as it fell.

The Patriot asserts that any farmer whose wheat yielded 15 or more bushels to the acre would have had more money had he not signed a crop reduction contract.

"In Mr. Keeley's case," the Patriot says, "that 17-acre field would have yielded 340 bushels on the lesser basis of his other fields, or more than 500 bushels if it produced in proportion to the best plot. Though he received $13.50 per acre bonus from the government, he would still have been more than $100, possibly $300 better off if he had not signed that contract.

Mrs. Rebecca Kirst spent last week visiting relatives in Fort Wayne.

Miss Grace Gloyd, of Chicago, was a week-end guest of Mrs. Emila Gloyd.

Mr. and Mrs. Herschel Shockley entertained relatives from Muncie over the week-end.

The Steward family reunion will be held next Sunday at the Franke Park, Fort Wayne.

There's No Free Ride on Taxes

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

Probably the most common of all political promises is that which pledges the average worker a free ride on taxes paid by somebody else.

It has been made by many candidates and many office-holders. It is being made today, and will continue to be made as campaign oratory waxes warmer during the months just ahead. And this in spite of the fact that the burden of hidden taxes—the taxes ostensibly levied on production and passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices—continues steadily to mount.

Here are some figures on that rising curve recently published at Washington:

In 1932, the total of hidden Federal taxes amounted to $780,703,659—approximately $25 per family.

In 1933, it rose to $1,083,901,625—about $35 per family.

In 1934, it stood at $1,992,051,345—over $63 per family.

In 1935, it reached $2,232,403,340—almost $70 per family.

The figures exclude State and local taxes, which, if added in, would boost the count far higher. Statisticians have estimated the entire bill at from $200 to $300 per family.

These costs aren't written down and sent to you by Government in a separate bill. But you're charged for them just the same. They appear in other bills—in bills for food, for clothing, for shelter, for virtually everything you buy. With other expenses they are included in the cost of production, and thus billed ultimately, though indirectly, to the consumer. Every new extravagance in government, every new tax levied to support extravagance, boosts that bill—and with it the cost of living.

If the American people want to cut their living costs they must begin by cutting the high cost of government. And the way to do it is to insist that politicians exercise real economy, instead of attempting to fool us with the old, old promise that somebody else will pay the fare.

There's no free ride on taxes.

Jay Mason is quite ill at his home west of town. Miss Cecile Shull is staying at the Mason home.

The Busy Bee Class of the M. E. Sunday School will meet Thursday afternoon with Elda and Athalyn Hensley.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Baker and Mr. and Mrs. William Erick spent several days last week in Michigan on a vacation.

Attendance at the Methodist Sunday School for Aug. 16 was 43, collection, $1.74; Lutheran attendance, 57, collection, $2.34.

Mr. and Mrs. Bernard McNabb, of Dearborn, Mich., spent several days last week in the John McNabb and Roy Chaney homes.

Mrs. Esther Gloyd and daughter, Beverly, are visiting the former's sister and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Morningstar at Toledo, O.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Horn and family, of Lake Charles, La., are visiting the former's father, Mr. George Horn, and other relatives.

William Moore, of Michigan, and Mr. and Mrs. Ed Wann, of Harlan were Friday afternoon guests at the Phillip Chaney home.

Mr. and Mrs. George Steward and Mr. and Mrs. Dale Steward, of Fort Wayne, were Friday evening guests at the Cora Steward home.

The Misses Margaret, Eula and Phyllis Chaney spent several days last week with their aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Oswalt of Fort Wayne.

C. L. Whitacre was a week-end guest in the R. U. Bowser home. Mrs. Whitacre and children, who have been visiting here the past week, returned home Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Oberholtzer, of New Kensington, Pa., are visiting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Markle and family. They will also visit other relatives in the vicinity.

The Ladies Aid of the M. E. Church entertained guests from the different Church Aid Societies in this vicinity at the community hall. About 150 ladies were present to enjoy the occasion. A delightful program was rendered.

James McKinley, 84, died Friday morning at 11 o'clock, of a complication of diseases. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon from the Lutheran Church. He leaves two sons, besides the widow, Mrs. Jane McKinley, Wm. McKinley, of Hicksville, O., and Delt McKinley, and several grandchildren. Four sisters and one brother also survive.

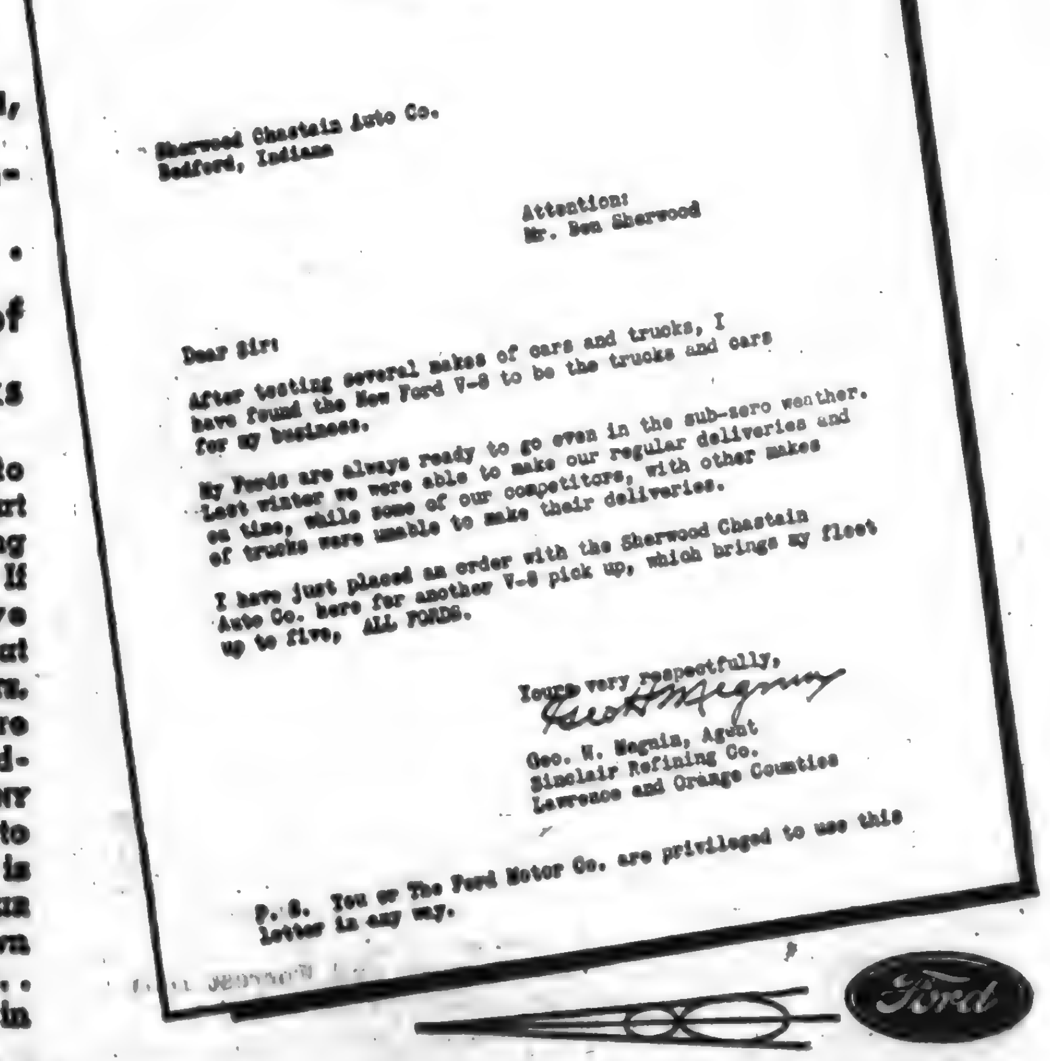
Bedford, Indiana, Man Makes "On-the-job" Test . . . Buys New Fleet of FORD V-8 Trucks



Bedford, Indiana

Sherwood Chastain Auto Co.
Bedford, Indiana

Attention:
Mr. Ben Sherwood

Dear Sir:

After testing several makes of cars and trucks, I have found the New Ford V-8 to be the trucks and cars for my business.

My Fords are always ready to go even in the sub-zero weather. Last winter we were able to make our regular deliveries and on time, while some of our competitors, with other makes of trucks were unable to make their deliveries.

I have just placed an order with the Sherwood Chastain Auto Co. here for another V-8 pick up, which brings my fleet up to five, ALL FORDS.

Yours very respectfully,

Geo. H. Megnin, Agent
Sinclair Refining Co.
Lawrence and Orange Counties

P. S. You or The Ford Motor Co. are privileged to use this letter in any way.

DID you ever stop to think WHY so many smart operators are changing to Ford V-8 Trucks? If you have, you have probably discovered that these men buy on FACTS, not guesswork. Before they put their hard-earned dollars into ANY new truck, they want to know how that truck is going to handle THEIR loads, under THEIR own operating conditions . . . and how it compares in operating cost.

George H. Megnin, of Bedford, Indiana, tested several makes before he decided on Ford V-8 Trucks. And his good judgment was rewarded a few weeks later when sub-zero weather hit Indiana. While his competitors were unable to make deliveries, his trucks were making regular trips.

TRY BEFORE YOU BUY! Put a Ford V-8 Truck on one of your regular jobs and take a good look at it IN ACTION.

Any new 112-inch wheelbase Ford V-8 Commercial Car can be purchased for $25 a month, with usual down-payment. Any new 131½-inch or 157-inch wheelbase Ford V-8 Truck can be purchased with usual down-payment on the new Universal Credit Company ½% per month Finance Plans.

BODY FOUND IN LAKE AFTER 24 HOURS

After a search of more than twenty-four hours, the body of Walter Oberholtzer, 22, of near Harlan, was recovered from Hamilton Lake Monday night at 7:30 o'clock.

State Policeman Sam Patton of the Ligonier barracks, using grappling hooks, found the body in fifty feet of water. The body was hooked earlier in the day, but had slipped off the hook.

The youth was with two other young men from Harlan when a gust of wind upset their canoe, Sunday afternoon. His companions said Oberholtzer had assured them he could swim enough to keep afloat if the canoe capsized, but his legs drew up under him. He was placed on the back of the canoe twice, but slipped off and failed to reappear the second time.

Walter is a relative of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Soule of St. Joe.

LITERARY DIGEST POLL NOW UNDER WAY

Individual ballots have been mailed to voters of Saint Joe and nearby communities in a new Literary Digest poll of over 10,000,000 persons to ascertain who will be the next President of the United States. The votes should be distributed by the Post Office locally within a few days, according to advice received to-day from the magazine's publishers.

Indiana's returns in this 1936 referendum will be tallied as a unit so they may be compared with the voting in other states, it is announced.

The voting of the post-card ballots is secret as no signature or other identification is required and the return postage is paid by magazine. To guard against tampering and counterfeiting a specially manufactured cardboard is used for printing the ballot, according to the sponsors of the poll, and all spurious votes can be detected immediately and destroyed.

The ballot asks the voter's choice of the seven officially nominated candidates and for whom he or she voted in the 1932 election to reveal the general drift from one party to another.

This announced as the fourth quadrennial national Presidential poll conducted by The Literary Digest. The three previous polls have forecast the Presidential winner with "uncanny accuracy."

Ballots are reported being mailed from the magazine's headquarters in New York at the rate of over 350,000 per day and will continue until every section of the country has been sent its proportionate share of the total being mailed.

Publication of the first tabulated returns is anticipated about September 5.

The Literary Digest states that just prior to the 1932 election it predicted that Roosevelt would get 59.86 per cent of the popular vote in his campaign against Hoover. The official returns showed that the President received 59.14 per cent of the Roosevelt-Hoover vote, revealing an error of 0.72 per cent in the magazine's forecast.

NEW RULING ON CROP CLASSIFICATION

Word has just been received from Washington that farmers participating in the 1936 farm program may classify cropland that was cultivated for the first time this year after June 30, and on which no soil-depleting crop was harvested or planted for harvest in 1936, as soil conserving if a good stand of a soil-conserving crop is growing on the land when performance is checked this fall.

This report was received today by L. M. Vogler, chairman of the Indiana Agricultural Conservation Committee.

Prior to this new provision in the program, land not cultivated before June 30 was considered as idle land this year and therefore classified as soil-depleting.

The soil-conserving crop, however, must be one which ordinarily survives the winter. If a nurse crop is seeded, farmers should be able to show evidence that the amount of nurse crop seeded per acre did not exceed one half the rate normally used when the crop is seeded alone for grain.

The agronomy department specialists at Purdue University do not recommend seeding alfalfa any later than Sept. 1, for the northern part of the state and Sept. 15 for the southern half of the state. Grasses may be sown any time previous to wheat sowing.

Evils of Restricted Production

No policy of restricting production and artificially raising prices is sound policy. Reduction of production inevitably affects the real wages of everyone; therefore, it lowers the standard of living. And, more than anything else, it leads to the bread lines, to ration cards and to a form of government that is not a democracy but an autocracy. (Frank Knox, Worcester, Mass., speech.)

SAFETYGRAMS BY BRAUN

The desire for reckless speed is still in the minds of many drivers. Speed to get somewhere at a wild pace, although when you get there you have nothing better to do than turn around and return. Needless, heedless hurry. Cutting all corners, taking all the chances that might be taken, beating every light and signal, driving like a demon through crowded streets.

Trying to pass everybody, talking, laughing, eating, drinking, and in the next minute a crash.

Death!

What is the sense of it? Who is to blame? Such an occurrence or description of speed is a common report in newspapers daily. The American Public shrugs its shoulders and reads on.

Not until we arouse a safety consciousness in the minds of the entire public will such recklessness stop.

HISTORICAL PAGEANT TO BE BIG FEATURE OF ST. JOE VALLEY FESTIVAL

The Historical Pageant to be given on Friday night, the opening night of the St. Joe Valley Festival, will be the first and perhaps the biggest feature of the whole three-day celebration. The Pageant opens with the entrance of Miss St. Joe Valley and her eighteen attendants (six from each of the three townships,) and address of welcome.

Then follows the ten episodes of the Pageant depicting scenes ranging from the discovery of The Valley, coming of the Jesuit priests, first church, early means of education, early wars, coming of Mad Anthony Wayne, pioneer wedding, Spirit of '61, and changes in transportation.

Rehearsals by the different groups are already well under way and we predict one of the biggest events held in The Valley Community in years.

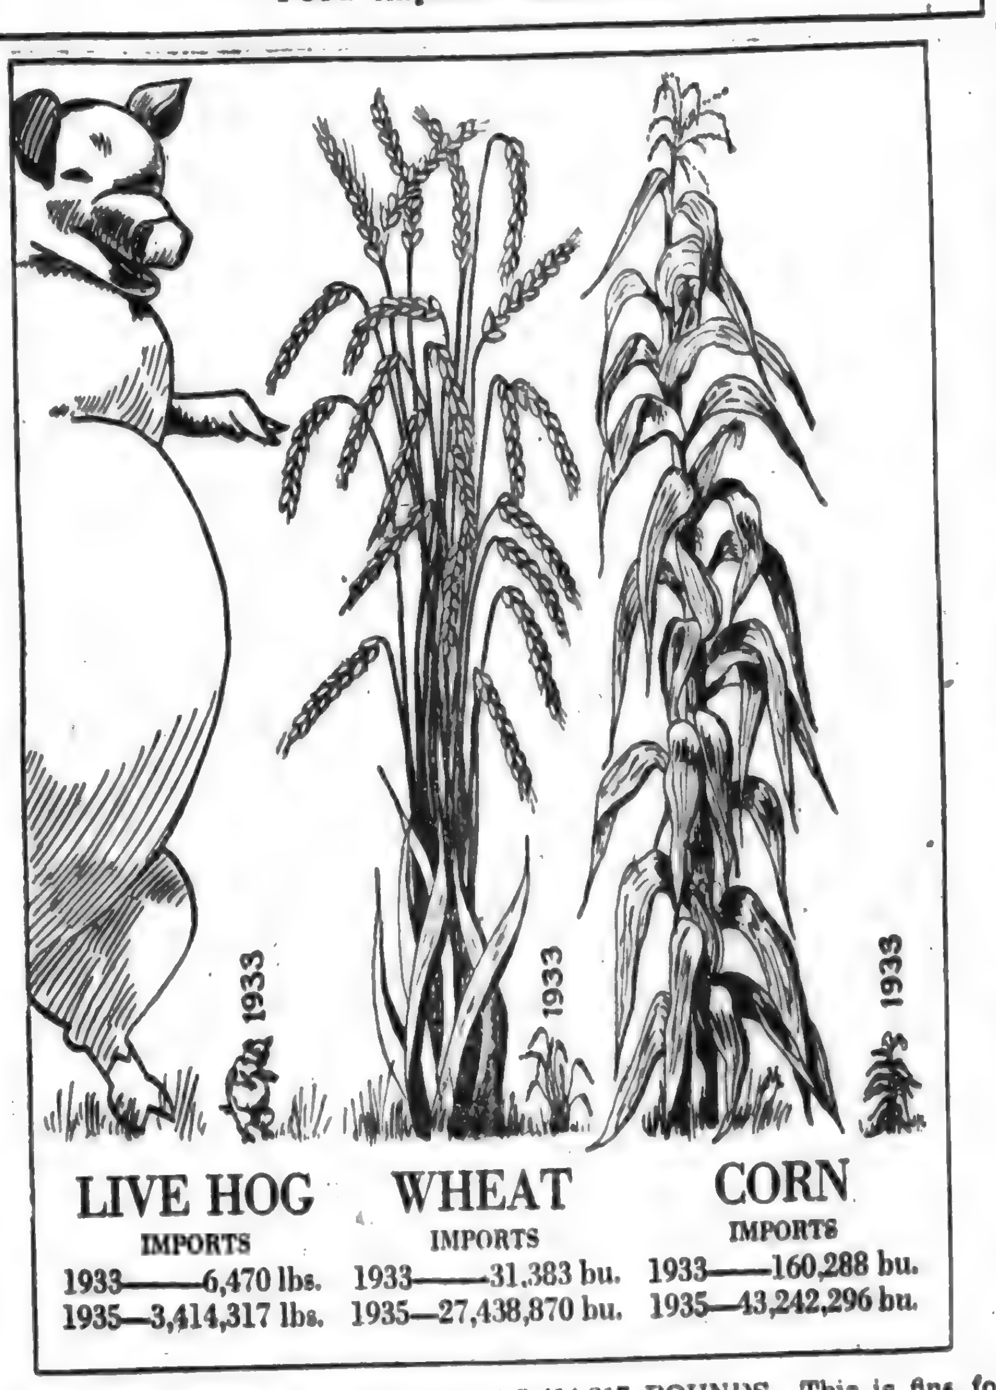
THE FOREIGN FLOOD

Food Imports 1933-1935



The latest figures from the Department of Commerce at Washington show what has happened to the American food market in two years of New Deal mismanagement.

While New Deal bureaucrats were slaughtering hogs, ploughing under crops and yanking farm lands out of production, the rest of the world was busy shipping in food that the American consumer is buying.

In 1933 we imported only 6,740 pounds of live-weight hogs. IN 1935, AFTER THE NEW DEAL HOG SLAUGHTER, WE IMPORTED 3,414,317 POUNDS. This is fine for the foreign hog raiser, but is hard on domestic producers and consumers alike.

The American corn and hog producing states have been penalized by fantastic New Deal theories which have turned the home market over to foreigners.

Corn, hogs and wheat represent only part of the loss to the American farmer. Hay, butter, beef and other farm products are pouring in.

The American farmer is demanding that this flood be stopped.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Horn and family, who have been visiting relatives in this vicinity, left Monday for their Western home.

Whether you happen to be an employer or an employe, you're now on the disbursing end of one of the longest pay rolls in history.

It carries hundreds of thousands of names. It has expanded more than 40 per cent during the past three years. Steadily it continues to expand—year by year, month by month.

In June of 1933, for example, its beneficiaries totalled over 565,000. By June of 1934, the count had swollen to 661,000. By 1935 they exceeded 717,000. On last June 30, the exact count was 824,259.

And on that date their pay checks added up to $129,487,167 for the month—which is at the rate of more than a billion and a half dollars per annum.

Who are these pay-rollers who collect such huge sums out of the taxes, direct or hidden, contributed by every American worker and consumer?

A recent report of the United States Civil Service Commission offers the answer.

They are the civilian employes on the swiftly expanding Executive pay roll of the Federal government. The list doesn't cover the Army or Navy, the Legislative or the Judicial branches of government. And, of course, it doesn't include the hordes of jobholders in state and local employ.

Most of this army of Executive Department pay-rollers is centered in Washington—in new and costly offices also built or rented at your expense.

What are we getting for all this expenditure—with its certain, though indirect, effect in boosting the cost of living? Principally a large bill, to be paid by our own and future generations, and a lot more bureaucratic interference with our work and our lives than we either want or need.

A reasonable number of public servants is a prime necessity of government. An unreasonable number means only useless activity and waste. And for both you pay the bill . . .

At the rate of a billion and a half dollars a year!

AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Unusually light receipts in all departments, brisk bidding and higher prices were the noticable features of our market this Thursday. Rains enough to at least give promise of Fall pasture stopped the unseasonable run of cattle and sheep to market and started the price back towards normal.

Hogs: Receipts were about one fourth of last week, with well finished fat hogs weighing from 160 to 190 selling for $11.00. Pigs about in line with last week's top, no stags or boars offered and roughs with a top of $8.65 and almost no sort.

Veals: Our consignors enjoyed the best calf market reported in many weeks. Receipts were normal but were not enough to supply the buyers. Our top was $9.20 and offerings were taken on a light sort even some rough and hand fed calves going as high as $9.00. Compare these prices with terminal quotations.

Lambs: Fewer buyers appeared in the sheep division than for other kinds of livestock but lambs sold readily and with a liberal sort, topped at $8.35. Thin unsorted feeder lambs, carrying a high percent of bucks, changed hands at from $5.25 to $7.00. Fat ewes $3.00 per cwt. No breeding ewes offered this week but there were a number of inquiries for them.

Cattle: Dairy cows continue to sell readily; the promise of better pasture stimulating the demand and lessening market supply. Prices ran from $40 for common ones to $60 for the best offerings which seemed to be not quite as good as last week's. No fat steers were on sale this week but some thin pasture steers and heifers brough from $4.70 to $4.85; these young cattle showed some dairy blood and weighed between five and six hundred pounds. It still takes a good cow to sell at or slightly above $4.00 per cwt. There were no heavy bulls sold this week but there were a number of light 600 to 700lb sales made at between $4.00 and $4.50 per cwt.

NATIONAL TWINS CONVENTION IN FT. WAYNE

The National Twins Association is holding its Fifth Annual Convention August 29th and30th, at Northern Indiana's finest and largest Amusement Center, Trier's Amusement Park, Ft, Wayne, Ind.

This unique organization is growing by leaps and bounds. It was started five years ago by Edw. M. Clink. Twenty-four twins appeared the first year. Last year 122 twins and triplets from nine States and Canada attended the Convention. There were so many twins that looked identical that the judges had to close their eyes and then look again in order to award the prizes to the right twins.

Saturday, August 29th, is reserved for out of town-twins who will register at the Wayne hotel, if they intend to stay over night. Special rates have been secured. A tour of interesting points and public places of which there are many, has been arranged for the afternoon. The big day of course will be Sunday, August 30th. The day starts off with registration of Twins, from nine till noon, when all gather for a basket picnic lunch. Each visitor brings their own basket lunch, and the rule is that any visitor who prefers food from another basket, other than his own, has the privilege of taking what he wishes and it is a privilege that is taken advantage of by many.

The time after lunch is taken up in stunts by Twins and others, and by the address of the guest speaker. Then, at two judging of the Twins begins, followed by the awarding of the prizes. The prizes are to be from two dollars to five dollars. The calsses are: the most identical female twins; most identical male twins; the oldest twins; the youngest twins; triplets; quadruplets; and a prize for the twins coming the greatest distance. It is an unusual sight to see so many doubles of all ages, from mere babies to well beyond three score and ten.

Several Professors of Psychology and Sociology will also be on hand to gather facts on the behavior of Twins. From studying the lives of identical Twins, scientists have gathered a great deal of information regarding heredity and environment. The Dionne Quintuplets have aroused so much curiosity concerning multiple births that this year's National Twin Convention promises to be the largest assemblage of Twins ever gathered together at one time. In a recent magazine article it was announced that there were more than 4,000,000 Twins in the United States.

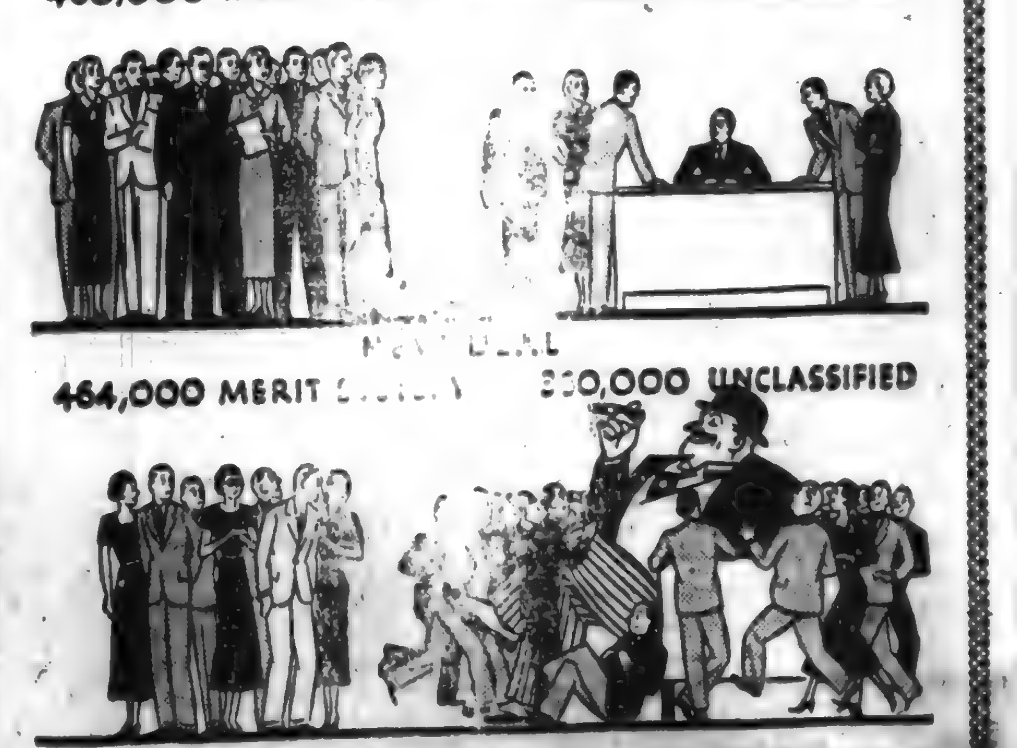
BUILDING A POLITICAL MACHINE!



A SUPINE New Deal Congress passed 15 laws exempting Government positions from the Merit System. This resulted in the addition of more than 250 thousand political workers to the Roosevelt-Farley machine, at an annual cost to taxpayers of 625 million dollars a year.

Hundreds of thousands of other political workers have been HIDDEN in the WPA and other agencies, thus receiving fat salaries out of relief funds supposedly for the destitute. The election of Republicans to the Congress will end political advantage over human misery.

STOLEN LAMBS UNLOADED AT CHAS. WATSON FARM

Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm is trying to find the owner or owners of a flock of lambs now located on the farm of Chas. Watson four miles southwest of Spencerville.

Mr. Watson told the sheriff that a man driving an automobile to which was attached a trailer stopped at his farm at 11:30 the night of August 13. The stranger said a tire on the trailer had gone flat and that he would like to leave his load of ten lambs for two days until he returned.

Permission was given and the lambs were turned loose in a pasture field. However, the stranger has never returned and Mr. Watson, becoming convinced the lambs had been stolen, notified the sheriff.

A report had been made to the officer that a farmer living across the Indiana-Ohio line had some lambs stolen and he identified three of those at the Watson farm as his own. It is still a mystery as to where the others belong.

Farmers of DeKalb county who cooperated in the crop control programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which was declared unconstitutional last January, have received a total of $436,165.80 in rental and benefit payments until June 30, this year, according to figures received from the AAA in Washington. This was divided as follows: $82,128.59 on wheat; $354,037,21 for cooperation in the corn-hog reduction program.

The amount received by all Indiana farmers who cooperated in the crop control programs was $42,165,752.55. WHAT MAKES A NEWSPAPER?

A mistaken idea with some people is that the newspaper is an individual proposition. If they don't like the editor they feel they must knock the paper and stand in the way of its success whenever possible. They do not realize that the local paper is just as much a part of the community as the schools, churches or anything else. The newspaper is different from any other business—it is a community affair. It is for service to the people and not for any individual.

You may not like the editor and the editor may not love you any too well—but the paper he is responsible for does just as much for you as the service he rendered others. There is nothing personal with it. It is here for a purpose and that purpose is to do what good it can in every way it can and the greater the support of those it undertakes to serve, the better service it can render.

It takes the people to make a good newspaper and without the help of the people no one can run a successful newsaper. It requires money to operate any kind of business—even the churches, and the papers are no exception and for this reason they must have the financial support of the business interests as well as the good will.

Few newspaper publishers make more than a comfortable living and scarcely one is reported wealthy from money made in the newspaper buisness. They deserve to be trusted by the peoeple—it is the editor and not the plant that makes a newspaper useful in a commuity, tho a liberal patronage is necessary if the paper is to be a credit to the village.—Covington (Va.) Poor Bear Bigger Tax Load: Landon

Urges Honest Bookkeeping in Buffalo Speech; Warns of Federal Waste.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas charged the Roosevelt administration with increasing by 25 per cent the share of the cost of government falling mainly on persons of incomes of $25 a week or less, in a speech delivered before a crowd of 25,000 persons here.

He deplored wasteful spending and deficits, with their increased burden of hidden taxes, and declared, "The time has come when we must establish a system of simple, honest bookkeeping."

The Republican Presidential candidate reiterated his belief in direct taxes levied on the net incomes of individuals and corporations as a means of charging everyone his fair share of the cost of government.

"In the year 1932, 59 cents out of every dollar collected by our federal government was secured from direct taxes," said Gov. Landon. "The other 41 cents was collected from indirect and hidden taxes.

"Four years later wha. do we find? We find that 51 cents out of every dollar collected by the federal government came from hidden taxes. In other words, the share of the cost of government falling mainly on those with incomes of $25 a week or less has increased 25 per cent during the three years of the present administration. They are paying far more than their rightful share of the cost of government."

Gov. Landon's views on education were made plain in his speech at Chautauqua, N. Y. "In Kansas," he said, "we believe that our schools—public, parochial and private—must be kept free of all control by the federal government. We insist that no teacher should be required to take any oath not required of all other citizens."

He warned that a danger of propaganda now present "concerns widespread use of the machinery of the federal government to maintain the present administration in power."

Mussel diggers operate chiefly in the Wabash and White Rivers, with some working near Fort Wayne, Elkhart and Noblesville in other streams. It is estimated that more than 90 per cent of the shell taken from Indiana streams is shipped to Iowa where it is made into buttons. AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

About one-third more head of livestock sold thru the auction this week than last. Recent rains have started pasture enough to keep young cattle away from market to a noticable extent and the few offered sold from one to three dollars per head higher than last week. Prospects for a corn crop are improved and feeder pigs are in better demand than we have had for several weeks, from a price angle they are selling from fifty to seventy-five cents per head higher than a week ago. With better pasture and higher cream prices dairy cows are selling from forty to seventy-five dollars per head with not enough to supply the buyers. Breeding ewes are bringing about one dollar per head more than at any time since early spring, anything showing a reasonable amount of quality selling readily at $6 per head. Bucks from $5.00 to $9.00. A fifteen cent drop in corn prices and prospects of a fair amount of new corn this fall added from fifty cents to one dollar per head to last week's pig prices, this raise also was apparent in the demand for sows with pigs at heel.

Fat stock prices were as follows: Hogs 175 to 225, $10.95. Roughs $7.80 to $8.05. Boars, $4.75 to $5.10. Lambs $7.50 to $7.90. Sheep $150 to $3.00. Bucks $2.00. Veals sold more than $1.00 per cwt above some other local markets showing a top of $9.10 with the bulk changing hands at from $8.00 to $9.00 and light weights and off grades down to between four and five. Slaughter cows continue to sell poorly most of them going below $3.00 per cwt. Bulls $5.40 to $3.65.

INSPECTION CARDS ARE NOW READY FOR DEKALB COUNTY FARMERS

DeKalb county farmers who are certain they have qualified or will qualify for soil-conservation payments under the 1936 farm program should send their request for inspection cards to the County Agricultural Conservation Committee immediately, Ralph Bartles, County Committeeman, said today.

Those who plan to adopt an approved soil-building practice such as liming or expect to make late fall seedings of a legume or grass need not wait until actual performance is made before requesting an inspection, Mr. Bartles explained.

On many farms, late seedings of soil-conserving crops will be made this year in line with the provisions to enable participating farmers to meet the drought emergency. On these farms, however, one inspection can be made now and a second check will follow sometime before the deadline later this fall.

On the other hand, Mr. Bartles pointed out that it is inadvisable for farmers, even though they have filled out a work sheet, to request a performance check if it is clearly evident that they have overplanted their soil-depleting acreage and have failed to adopt soil-conserving crops and practices that will qualify them for payment.

Farmers can be reasonably sure whether or not they have qualified, he said, by comparing their 1936 planted acreage with their approved soil-depleting base and with numbers of acres of soil-depleting crops planted on the farm in 1935. If they are not certain that they have or have not qualified after making this comparison, they should consult their local committeemen or their county agent.

Emergency forage crops planted on or after July 1 will be ignored by the farm reporter when he inspects the land, Mr. Bartles reminded, for these crops in no way will affect the classification of the land; that is, he cautioned if they did not involve the destruction of a good stand of a soil-conserving crop.

McCormick's Creek State Park, Near Spencer Has Many Attractions for Visitors

Rustic log shelters, a modern swimming pool and scores of other attractions lay behind the inviting entrance to McCormick's Creek state park on Road 46, just east of Spencer. Easily accessible over improved state highways, this park has enjoyed a steady increase in popularity and attendance since its establishment twenty years ago.

The shelter shown above is one of several erected in the park to increase the facilities for picnic groups and campers and has been in constant use since its completion. Surrounding these shelters are picnic camping areas, each with a convenient supply of pure water, tables, benches and a modern bathhouse and a shallow wading pool where youngsters can splash to their hearts content. The attractive new entrance is typical of those completed or under construction at other state parks.

One of the new attractions is a natural history museum where visitors can study plants, birds and small animals common in the vicinity. Already popular with botanists and nature students, the park gains in interest through the establishment of the museum. The museum also provides a headquarter for the nature guide service and is the scene of frequent lectures on bird and plant life.

Group camp facilities have been taxed to capacity throughout the vacation months with hundreds of boys and girls enjoying the out-of-doors, the miles of trails, the swimming pool and other healthful recreation. Saddle horses are available at the park and there are many miles of bridle paths to be explored.

The Beech Woods, the Pine Forest, the observation tower, the old quarry from which stone was taken for the foundation of the state capitol, the falls in Clifty Creek, the canyon which the stream has cut during centuries of flow—all are places of interest which hold an attraction for the visitor. Hotel accommodations are available throughout the year at Canyon Inn.

McCormick's Creek state park covers an area of 662 acres, the major part of which is heavily wooded, and was established in 1916.

Famous Historian Hits New Dealers on Broken Pledges

New York, N. Y. — America's most famous historian, James Truslow Adams, in his latest volume on current history, discloses that from the nonpartisan viewpoint of the historian the New Deal administration has broken more pledges to the people than any other administration.

"I cannot recall any other president and party which has gone so far in the solemnity of their pledges," Mr. Adams writes in his new book. "Nor do I recall any other such repudiation of them.

"That repudiation has not been the result of overwhelming circumstance, but has largely resulted from the endeavor to make over the whole pattern of our social and economic life to meet the personal approbation of a president.

"The question at once arises, how can self-government continue if a people cannot put trust in the most solemn pledges of the party and candidates for whom the majority vote?

"If we cannot do so, then the system of party government must crumble and we have nothing to take its place, except dictatorship or revolutionary chaos."

The book, "The Living Jefferson," is published by Scribners. Mr. Adams is the author, among others, of "Founding of New England," a Pulitzer prize winner, and "The Epic of America."

Landon Leading 2 to 1 in Six-State Radio Poll

Chicago, Ill.—Reflecting the nationwide swing away from the New Deal Party, Governor Alf M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, is maintaining a two-to-one lead over President Roosevelt in a poll conducted by the midwestern radio station, WIND.

Covering six states, Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Iowa and Wisconsin, the poll requires that all votes must be written and sent in through the personal interest of the voter.

With Governor Landon showing better than 13,000 votes at the latest count and President Roosevelt trailing with less than 6,000, the minor candidates of Lemke, Browder and Thomas divided another 1,500 votes.

Clayton Bailey, Democratic County Chairman was in town Monday evening on business, and he called at The News office.

Ten typewriters, an adding machine and a mimeograph were stolen from Waterloo high school last week Wednesday. Footprints indicated two men and a woman were implicated and that a truck was used.

The huge tent theatre for the Ginnivan Dramatic Co., was completely demolished by a cyclone at Payne, O., on Monday afternoon of last week. The Ginnivans will endeavor to finish the season with their old tent which was in storage at Ashley.

Mrs. Stella Goldsmith and daughter, Virginia, Mrs. Howard Borthwick and Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Dilley, attended the silver wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Stabe in Richland township Sunday. Over 150 guests enjoyed the reception and program given in honor of the couple. Mrs. Dilley appeared on the program, reading two poems in keeping with the occasion.

William Strouse, Triangle Foods proprietor, had his most embarassing moment, Monday, while making a delivery at Ft. Wayne. He picked up a gallon of mustard, in front of a customer's place, and the bottom came out, letting the mustard splatter in three ways, so Bill related, and this was to be expected if the product was true to name, covering Indiana, Ohio and Michigan. Bill happened to be in the path of the Indiana portion and was he a sight. From his waist down he resembled a hot dog sandwich. He wiped himself off the best he could and went to the store for a new pair of trousers. His be-smeared pair will be dyed green to cover up all signs of stains.

Tax Levy in Kansas Again Hits New Low

TOPEKA, KAS.—Kansas' lowest tax levy and the lowest total tax charges against property in the state for ten years has been fixed by the state tax commission here. The new levy will raise $3,276,425.88 in taxes, compared to $3,657,312.85 in 1935.

How the state's taxes and tax rate have declined during the administration of Gov. Alf M. Landon, famed for balancing the Kansas budget while other states as well as the federal government were going far into the red, is shown in the following table:

Year	Rate in mills	Yield
1933	1.88	$4,847,960.68
1934	1.30	3,330,501.77
1935	1.44	3,657,312.85
1936	1.29	3,27C,425.88

The tax commission reported that it "has made ample provision for a possible rise in commodity prices, thus safeguarding against a deficit because of increased maintenance costs in the state institutions."

The statement also said: "The commission has given every consideration possible to every item of expenditures and receipts, to the end that the state's business may continue on the same business-like plane used by successful private and corporate businesses."

DO AS TAMMANY DOES

JIM FARLEY has been summoning New Deal State leaders to New York and instructing them to duplicate the Tammany set-up in their own States.
President Roosevelt said on July 2nd, 1932: "The society of Tammany is on the side of popular rights and against exploitation of the many, for the benefit of the favored few."
For years the Tiger has shown other big city machines how to buy votes with public funds. Mr. Roosevelt sought to crush it in 1932. Now Roosevelt and Farley want to Tammanize the Nation.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. LI. (51 Years.) (In The St. Joe Valley) ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPT. 10, 1936 NUMBER 37

Great Valley Festival Success

Admitted by the Many Hundreds of Visitors at St. Joe Last Week-end when Walter Whitehurst Post 283, Sponsor 100 Years of Progress in the St. Joe Valley.

MANY OUT OF TOWN GUESTS

Complete Text of the 10 Episodes will Appear in Next Weeks Issue of Valley News

2 2 0 REGISTERED SUNDAY

The three day celebration, sponsored by Post 283 American Legion and rendered through the cooperation of the citizens and organizations of the St. Joe Valley, show what can be accomplished when the people of a community will work together for the success of a given project.

Various articles for the exhibit of Antiques, Civil and World War relics and needle craft, sponsored by the ladies of the Legion Auxiliary began to arrive Thursday evening, being classified, tagged and numbered by the ladies in charge, and by Friday noon the room was well filled with displays dating from "way back when" up to the present time.

Special mention should be made of the wonderful display of flowers which were banked across the end of the display room, giving an added touch of beauty to a room already filled with works of art and curious pieces from a bygone day which truly portrayed the difficulties which our forefathers encountered and the masterful way in which they met their problems.

After viewing the various exhibits pertaining to the early life of The Valley one can truly say, "Necessity is the Mother of Invention."

The display of needle work and dress designs by the 4-H Club was an excellent advertisement of the capabilities of the younger generation and the girls are to be complimented on the neatness of their work. The 4-H Club is an organization of which The Valley can well be proud.

The display room was well attended both Friday and Saturday and at 10:00 P. M. Saturday evening all displays were released to their owners, the room being cleared by mid-night, with little or no confusion, each piece going to its rightful owner which is a credit to the efficiency of the ladies in charge.

Ribbons were awarded as follows:

1. Fancy Crochette: First, Ruby Kraft; Second, Jane Randall.
2. Wearing Knit: First, Eloise Bowman; Second, Virgilia Kinsey.
3. Cut Work: First, Ruby Kraft; Second, Lora Leighty.
4. Pillow Cases: First, Floy Smith; Second, Arminta Steward.
5. Aprons: First, Lora Leighty; Second, Minnie Gee.
6. Pillows: First, Arminta Steward; Second, Minnie Gee.
7. Spreads: First, Ruby Kraft; Second, Amanda Coburn.
8. Quilts: First, Minnie Gee; Second, Ruby Kraft.
9. Bedroom Set: First, Arminta Steward; Second, Mable Erick.
10. Flower Arrangement: 1st., Estelle Baker; 2nd., Doris Yeiser.
11. Club Exhibit: 1st., Ruth Keesler; 2nd., Jean Goldsmith.
12. Pictures: 1st., Earl W. Kinsey; 2nd., Anna Tustison.
13. Hooked Rugs: 1st., John Engle; 2nd., Mrs. Frank Porter.

The Exhibit consisted of christening gowns up to wedding caps, veils, gloves and shoes, dresses, hats, cookies, hair nets, combs, wristlets.

The furniture from cradles, rockers, spinning wheels, beds, [illegible], chairs, tables, candle moulds, quilts, pipes.

The old library of land grants, bibles, histories, war relics, gas masks, helmets, canteen, swords, records, flags, ammunition of Civil War, guns.

Dishes over 100 years old.

To be there and enjoy the work, and interest shown by visitors was worth seeing.

Mrs. Walter Zonker's oil paintings and Mr. Clyde and Karl Hart's very beautiful arrangement of flowers, made the 100 years of progress of the St. Joe Valley one to be the first, and long remembered.

The ladies of the Legion Auxiliary now being formed wish to thank every one who helped us in any way make our exhibit such a success during the St. Joe Valley Festival.—Committee.

After the Pageant Friday evening a concert was given by the High School Band and DeKalb County Legion Band combined, under the able direction of C. A. Woodcox and Joe Miser. The concert was well received by the audience.

Saturday Races

Saturday morning saw some fine entries in the Soap Box Derby races. First prize went to Marcel Pugsley and Junior Curie; 2nd. prize, Wm. Monroe and Franklin Sechler; 3rd. prize, Robert Ridgway and Robert Simanton. The two other entries were Wm. Mansfield and Albert Rowe, and Ned Keller and Hubert Bleeks.

Foot race winners were Hubert Bleeks, first, and Jack Goodwin, second. Other participants were Robert Simanton, Robert Ridgway and Harold Shull.

The foot race for 10 years and under was won by Maurice Shuff over Robert Simanton and three other boys.

Opal Kinsey won the rope skipping contest over Beverly Wade and Mary Ann Quance in a 2½ minute record.

The Parade on Saturday afternoon was the largest ever staged in the community, with a colorful display of floats and decorated cars from every part of The Valley, being led by the Drum and Bugle Corps of the American Legion Post of Waterloo.

The parade was made of the following Valley entrants:

Marshall, Dr. Baumgartner.
Legion Band.
Spencer Twp. 4-H Club.
A. D. Perry and Alice Baker on horse back.

Merchants, Ralph Sechler.
Producers, Geo. Hart.
Organizations, Lutheran S. S.
Fantastic, Ox drawn Buggy.
Bicycle, from Spencer Twp.

The Fastastic section of the parade showed some very clever and original designs by the various entrants. Shortly after the parade a replica of a French locomotive was seen coming down the street and people wondered if a B. & O. train had been sidetracked. But it turned out to be Post 47 American Legion arriving on the scene. They had intended to be in the parade but on arriving at Spencerville they were thoughtful enough to make one small boy happy by giving Master Robert Lee Shockley, 5, a ride in the locomotive, which reflects the true spirit of the Legion organization.

This outfit which hails from Ft. Wayne, brought their colorful and efficient Drum and Bugle Corps which immediately combined with the Corps from Waterloo and with two top-notch outfits playing as one gave a concert which was a delight to the eye as well as the ear, while the locomotive was kept busy well into the night giving rides to the young people.

The Saturday night program given by the Jones Accordion Band of Ft. Wayne, was greeted with one of the largest crowds in many years, and all were pleased with the class of entertainment given by these young people.

Sunday Services

The Centennial came to an end on Sunday when all the churches of Concord, Spencer and Newville Townships held union services and a basket dinner at the Community Gymnasium. The co-operation, that was manifest in the other features of the three days festivities, was also evident in Sunday's services.

Rev. J. N. Scholes, master of ceremonies for the Sunday services, made a brief summary of the true and false conceptions of Christian unity or the true state that is desired by all serious thinking Christians.

Jeff Buss of Walterloo led an inspiring song service through all sessions, supplemented by quartettes, solos and duets from people from the surrounding country. The morning sermon, given by the Rev. L. E. Clayton of Spencerville, on the subject of "A Religion That Satisfies," was the voice of the hour in religious needs of our present generation.

The basket dinner was a credit to the occasion and everyone seemed to do credit to this part of the program .

The afternoon session was presided over by the Rev. C. J. Ferster, who introduced the speaker of the afternoon, J. Raymond Schutz of North Manchester College. Prof. Schutz spoke on the subject, "Progress Through Patience." He strongly emphaszied the fact that all progress has come through patience and that progress to be genuine and safe in growth must and will always be slow in growth. "Men, he said, "must be fit to receive progress when it comes. If they are not ready to receive progress then the reaction will leave them in worse state than before." He further said that the world always lost ground when it sought to gain a rapid and premature progress by revolutionary means or by the instruments of force. He said further, "slow, systematic progress is the natural outgrowth of reserved and patient effort, and the world should learn the lesson taught by the nations like Russia and Spain before forging ahead of the natural providential way of world progress."

J. RAYMOND SCHUTZ

Roy Reidenbach, a spokesman for the American Legion, thanked the surrounding country for their patronizing support during the Centennial, saying that at no time did they find a person that refused to help in some way. The community in turn thanks the American Legion for the presentation of this clean, wholesome Centennial celebration.

The celebration as a whole can be considered as an event in the history of the St. Joe Valley, which was made a success only by the whole hearted co-operation of the various committees and citizens and organizations of The Valley.

We will be seeing you in a hundred years.

THANK YOU

Walter Whitehurst Post No. 283 of the American Legion, as a unit, wishes to take this means of thanking every individual and organization for their co-operation and assistance in connection with the "One Hundred Years of Progress" and Homecoming celebration. We would mention the committees working with the Legion and especially, the chairmen of these committees. Also, we would mention the Forty and Eight Voiture from Ft. Wayne, and the DeKalb County American Legion Band.

The response from The Valley was one hundred percent; and likewise from other communities.

We also wish to thank the public generally for their patronage; and we trust that our conduct in this, our maiden effort at a community project, was such as to merit your future patronage and support.

WHAT MAKES A NEWSPAPER?

A mistaken idea with some people is that the newspaper is an individual proposition. If they don't like the editor they feel they must knock the paper and stand in the way of its success whenever possible. They do not realize that the local paper is just as much a part of the community as the schools, churches or anything else. The newspaper is different from any other business—it is a community affair. It is for service to the people and not for any individual.

You may not like the editor and the editor may not love you any too well—but the paper he is responsible for does just as much for you as the service he rendered others. There is nothing personal with it. It is here for a purpose and that purpose is to do what good it can in every way it can and the greater the support of those it undertakes to serve, the better service it can render.

It takes the people to make a good newspaper and without the help of the people no one can run a successful newspaper. It requires money to operate any kind of business—even the churches, and the papers are no exception and for this reason they must have the financial support of the business interests as well as the good will.

Few newspaper publishers make more than a comfortable living and scarcely one is reported wealthy from money made in the newspaper buisness. They deserve to be trusted by the peoeple—it is the editor and not the plant that makes a newspaper useful in a commuity, tho a liberal patronage is necessary if the paper is to be a credit to the village.—Covington (Va.) "Telling Blows"

Highlights taken from the acceptance speech of Colonel Frank Knox, Republican candidate for vice president, at Chicago Stadium, July 30, 1936:

I charge the present administration with delaying recovery in the United States and the world.

• • •

The coercive control of bank credit leads unavoidably to control of investment and that leads to the end of competitive industry and free enterprise.

• • •

All the major New Deal experiments have ended in failure and economic loss.

• • •

Next November you will choose the American way.

• • •

America is too young, too vigorous, to be deceived by false promises of an easy way.

• • •

The people know that with election of a new administration next November the dammed up forces of recovery will burst forth in a magnificent prosperity.

• • •

With the American system preserved, we shall . . . have a free people, living in plenty and security, without exploitation of destitution.

WYATT REUNION AND CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION

100th Anniversary of Settlement of Relatives in DeKalb County is Observed

The Wyatt relatives and friends held their annual reunion and celebrated the 100th anniversary of the settlement of the Wyatt relatives in DeKalb county at the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Leighty near St. Joe on Aug. 30th. One hundred and twenty-five relatives and friends were present. Except for a brisk wind, the day was ideal.

At the noon hour, after the invocation by the Rev. G. W. Wyatt of Findlay, Ohio, a bountiful dinner was served.

After the remains of the dinner were cleared away, the meeting was called to order and the program was rendered.

In his opening remarks, Dr. A. R. Wyatt, president, made the following observations: "We are assembled here today, not alone to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the settlement of the Wyatt relatives in DeKalb county.

"Nathan Wyatt, our grandfather, was the head of all the Wyatt families which settled in DeKalb county, but John Wyatt, my father, was the first one of the clan to come to this state to establish a home.

"A great many improvements and advances in all lines of endeavor have been made during the 100 years just past. In the matter of communication, it is a long stride from the mouth to ear method to the telephone and radio and in trasportation from the ox cart to automobile and airplane and in agriculture from the wooden plow and the sickle to the great gang plows and the equally great combines.

"In a great tower at Geneva, Wis., has been placed the most powerful telescope in the world and just recently they have discovered a new planet, which is so far away that light, traveling a million miles or more a second, has not yet reached the earth. Our finite minds are not able to comprehend the full meaning of this distance but with our limited understanding when we contemplate the vastness, magnificence and beauty of this great universe and when we understad that somewhere out there in this wonderful universe, we, the creatures of God's handiwork, will spend eternity, we are constrained to say with the Psalmist, 'O death where is thy sting; Oh grave where is thy victory?' "

After these remarks, the following program was rendered:

A very fine letter of congratulations and good wishes from Mr. and Mrs. Mills of Cleveland, Ohio, was read by Mrs. John R. Leighty. A poem "Father Wyatt's Prayer," by our own Hoosier poet, Frank Carleton Nelson, was recited by Virignia Koontz of LaGrange. Dr. A. R. Wyatt of Fort Wayne, gave his own poem, "My Old Farm Home." A very beautiful and impressive memorial service, arranged by Emily White-Hull of Hicksville, Ohio, was then presented, a part of which consisted of the playing of taps by Samuel Koontz of LaGrange.

A very entertaining contribution to the program was presented by the Rev. and Mrs. G. W. Wyatt of Findlay, Ohio. They rendered several duets accompanied by Rev. Wyatt on his guitar.

After the singing of one verse of that old song, "Blessed be the Tie That Binds" and a closing prayer by Rev. Wyatt, the company adjourned to meet again in one year at Eckhart Park, Auburn.

There are, to date, nearly 1,000 descendants of Grandfather Nathan Wyatt.

Cockeyed Tax Law

"This (The Surplus Tax law) is the most cockeyed piece of tax legislation ever imposed in a modern country and if I am elected I shall recommend the immediate repeal of this vicious method of taxation . . . AUBURN LIVESTOCK MARKET REPORT

Furnished by
Ward Jackman, Sec.-Treas.

Total receipts at the yard for this week's sale were thirty-five head more than last week; this increase was mostly in the sheep department.

Sheep: Lambs weighing 75lbs. up and averagig 85lbs brought $8.45. Lambs in this class were not finished but showed some flesh and quality, lighter lambs brot $7.40 to $8.10. Fat ewes sold fast at $3.85 and aged bucks at $2.50 to $3.25. Breeding ewes sold by the head at from $4.00 to $6.00.

Calves: Heavy calves were the only ones to top the market this week. The top went to Zeemer & Zeemer of Harlan, Ind., at $9.10. It took a calf well above 200 to bring this price and light calves sold from $8.25 down. There are so many light thin calves on all markets lately owing to poor pasture and high milk and butter prices that they sell badly.

Hogs: Receipts in the hog department were very light. The top was paid for a load averaging 210 which brought $10.90. Roughs were taken at $8.00 to $8.50 and heavy boars as high as $5.35. Feeder pig prices were unchanged from last week, with more buyers than pigs.

Cattle: The offerings of dairy cows were not of high enough quality to encourage high bidding but, value considered, prices seemed to be unchanged. Slaughter cows brought from $3.35 to $3.70. Bulls $4.45 to $5.10. A group of Hereford heifers, weighing about 450 and showing quite good breeding brought $6.00.

DEPUTIES NAMED TO REGISTER VOTERS

With the general election less than two months away and political activities increasing, a campaign is in progress to get all eligible voters properly registered.

County Clerk Carl Walter is the chief registration officer of the county by virtue of his office and many voters are calling at the court house to have him make out their registration cards. However, for the convenience of the voters and to systematize the registration, aides have been appointed in every precinct of the county and the political parties are making a check of the voters.

The last day to register before the election is Oct. 5. It is unneccessary for a person to register this year if he previously registered and has made no change in his residence or his name.

However, if he has moved, even though he remain in the same precinct, he should have a transfer made in the records. If a woman voter changes her name, it is necessary to register again.

Voters who are properly registered may participate in the general election regardless of whether they voted in the primary last spring.

The number of voters in this county is about 17,000. The county clerk estimates that 1,000 transfers of registration will be necessary before the election and that 500 or 600 new voters will register.

If there are any in the Tri-township that have not registered, see the following:

Concord—Belle Woodcox and Stanley Baker.

Newville—Reba Smith and Mark Murphy.

Spencer—Otto Ginther and Winifred Hart.

Cattle Slaughter Angers Farmers

Protest New Deal Cure-All; Seek to Save Remnants of Herds.

By FRANK RIDGWAY

More than 800,000 cattle have been killed and added to the New Dealers' animal "death list," along with little pigs and expectant mother-sows slaughtered near the beginning of the Roosevelt administration's "three long years." These cattle killing activities have been carried on in connection with the administration's Bang's disease campaign conducted in 48 states during the last two years.

Meat and milk production has been reduced and more and more imports of cattle, beef, and dairy products are coming in from foreign countries as a result. In the meantime Bang's disease runs rampant in the farmers' dairy and beef herds.

Disgruntled farmers favor calling a halt on the test. They have become dissatisfied with the program. But their cattle still are being "mowed down" as fast as federal government men can make their tests to sort out the diseased cattle and send them to slaughter.

Bothered by Dreams.

Apparently men who are trying to run the farms of America by jerking puppet strings radiating out from Washington, still are working on the idea that there are too many cattle in the United States.

Farmers and ranchmen are anxious to get rid of cattle infected with Bang's disease, which causes the loss of calves in both dairy and beef herds and undulant fever in human beings. But after having 10,000,000 tests made on their animals, they have become skeptical. They doubt the accuracy and value of the test.

Farmers and New Deal planners alike apparently thought the program had merit when it was started. The idea of government aid in getting rid of infected animals seemed sound. Experience soon proved that the planners had entirely overlooked the fact that the test for Bang's disease had not been standardized and perfected to the point where it could be depended upon to give satisfactory results when applied under various conditions on a national scale.

Some farmers had taken both the test and the sound judgment of the Washington officials pretty much for granted. They have now found to their sorrow that neither of their assumptions were justified.

Farmers Now Dissatisfied.

For many months dissatisfaction has spread among farmers throughout the country. Through their breeders' organizations dairy and beef cattle owners decided to make an investigation and go to the bottom of the Bang's campaign fostered by politicians at Washington. About 200 of the cattlemen's representatives recently met in Springfield, Illinois, where they aired the whole cattle killing program.

They found out that from the beginning the New Dealers apparently had used the Bang's disease test as an excuse to slaughter more of their cattle. Farmers now realize that they have been paying a high price to aid political theorists in planning their revolutionary agricultural reduction scheme.

Nearly 700,000 herds of beef and dairy animals have been submitted for test since July 1, 1934. Some of the farmers have lost many of their most valuable animals. In one southern Wisconsin dairy herd of 859 cattle all of them were found to be diseased excepting 130.

New Deal Pacts Nullify Dairy Sanitation Code

Chicago.—The "mad internationalists" of the New Deal party, in flooding the country with foreign dairy products, are throwing America's program of sanitation to the winds, according to Congressman F. D. Culkin of Oswego, New York, assistant director of the farm division of the Republican National committee.

"In the past 20 years, the government and the farmers of America have spent more than $500,000,000 to protect the public health and obtain dairy products free from dirt and disease," said Congressman Culkin.

"Under the present reciprocal trade agreements made by Secretary Hull and President Roosevelt, all this disbursement is thrown to the winds because the Hull treaties make no provisions as to quarantine and sanitary regulations and the protection of milk products at their source, in foreign countries. Furthermore, the present treaties bind the United States not to make any further changes in the quarantine provisions of our own country during the life of the treaties."

62,894 Out of Jobs.

Chicago.—Economists here estimated that 62,894 rural persons were denied the opportunity for self-support by imports of cattle, beef and veal under the New Deal during 1935.

$1,391,099,397 in '35 Farm Imports

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Agricultural imports during 1935, which saw grains and meats, as well as their by-products and substitutes, multiply again and again under Roosevelt easy trade policies, were estimated here to have reached a total value of $1,391,099,397.

Imports of one item alone—cottonseed oil, a lard substitute—out of a long list, denied opportunity for self support to 403,197 rural persons, by displacing the production of 3,692,000 acres of American farm land. A total of 33,463,336 acres were displaced by all the imports together, with a total of 1,741,000 rural persons denied the opportunity of self-support.

Computing Land Displacements.

The displacement of land is computed from the acreage which would have been necessary to produce the amount of each item imported, if it had been produced in America, rather than by the coolie or peasant labor of foreign countries.

For instance, during 1935, there were imported into the United States 43,242,296 bushels of corn, according to the United States department of commerce. By dividing that total by the American 10 year average yield per acre, it can be shown that the corn imports would have required 1,814,000 acres for their production in this country.

Effect of Pork Imports.

Such estimates of the effect of other items of import are equally revealing. Imports of 5,297,335 pounds of pork, hams and bacon during 1935 displaced the production of 68,070 acres of American farm land. The 27,438,870 bushels of wheat imported could have been produced on 2,220,000 acres here, taking some 61,626 rural inhabitants off the relief rolls.

Canadian Farm Exports to U. S. Rise Sharply

Ottawa, Ont.—As a result of President Roosevelt's trade agreement with Canada, Canadian exports to the United States have shown marked increases during the first four months of 1936, according to the report of the department of trade and commerce. Some of the increases were as high as 300 per cent, heaviest gains being made in agricultural products and lumber.

The number of horses shipped to the United States rose to 8,700, compared with 1,600 during the corresponding period a year ago. The export value of swine increased from $3,000 to $390,000 and cattle exports increased $1,400,000. Cheese exported to the United States rose from $21,000 to $407,000 and exports of patent leather increased $37,000.

Advances in the export of lumber were marked, soft wood lumber increasing from $1,642,000 to $3,227,000. Hardwood exports showed an increase of almost 100 per cent to $307,000, square shingles increased from $1,189,000 to $1,510,000, wood pulp from $6,724,000 to $7,965,000 and newsprint from $20,315,000 to $23,589,000.

French New Deal May Bring Panic

Public Fear Parallels U. S. After Roosevelt Victory in Fall of 1932.

Chicago.—Threatened with the establishment of a radical government—"a sort of New Deal on the American pattern"—France is experiencing a wave of public fear that is described by Howard Wood, prominent economic writer, as similar to the financial panic which swept the United States between the election of the New Deal in November, 1932, and the date of the inauguration in March, 1933.

"In France," Mr. Wood reports, "the 'little fellows' are trying to protect their savings by hoarding. Runs on the banks have reduced deposits. Capital is leaving France as fast as there are ships available to carry gold. Disclosure of plans to 'soak the thrifty' and schemes for vast political expenditures have intensified the scramble.

"Similarly in the United States," Mr. Woods adds, "the panic did not begin until the interval between the election of the New Deal and the date of its taking office, and culminated in the nation - wide bank moratorium of March, 1933."

Observers of business and industrial conditions have already established the fact that the low point of the depression was passed during the summer of 1932, and the upward climb to prosperity was already under way in the fall of the year. Fears that arose from the proposals of New Dealers for large public expenditures, their opposition to budget balancing plans and comments favoring inflation stopped recovery and brought on the panic.

Where the Taxes Go

Washington.—Although Adelino, N. M., doesn't rate a United States post office, it did manage to wangle a $8,000 school gymnasium out of the WPA. The treasury will put up $4,432.

The WEEKLY CONSTITUTIONAL

by MAX BERNS

National and Local Rule

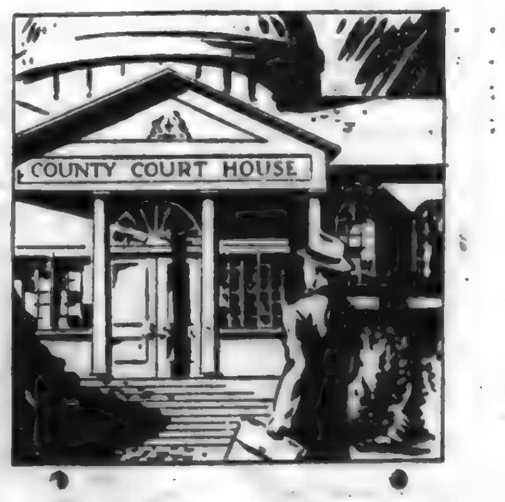
Is there any advantage in the division of powers between federal, state and local governments?

On this point, Jefferson, in 1799, said: "I am for preserving to the states the powers not yielded by them to the union, and to Congress the legislature of the union, its constitutional share in the division of powers; and I am not for transferring all the powers of the states to the general government, and all those of that government to the executive branch."

In his Autobiography, Jefferson adds: "It is not by the consolidation, or concentration of powers, but by their distribution, that good government is effected. Were not this great country already divided into States, that division must be made, that each might do for itself what concerns itself direct, and what it can so much better do than a distant authority.

"Every State again is divided into counties, each to take care of what lies within its local bounds; each county again into townships or wards, to manage minuter details; and every ward into farms, to be governed by its individual proprietor. . . .

"It is by this partition of cares," concludes Jefferson, "that the mass of human affairs may be best managed for the good and prosperity of all."



In our Constitution, "we the people" effectuate this principle (a) by definitely limiting the powers of our government and (b) by stating in the 10th Amendment that "The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution . . . are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people."

HISTORICAL INTRODUCTION

Two hundred years ago this very ground on which we stand was peopled by a race of savages who were wild rovers of the forest.

At this time this country of the Northwest was not divided into States as it is now, but was a vast unbroken wilderness. The immense forests, the boundless prairies, the grand rivers were still to the white man a locked treasure land, from which, however, in future years the wealth of soil and commerce was destined to pour forth. But not into the laps of those who first braved the privations and hardships of life among savages in a trackless forest.

All honor to the brave and heroic men who were first to find a path though the wilderness and to follow the mighty rivers in their courses to the sea.

And who were they? None other than the earnest, zealous missionaries of the Cross of Jesus Christ, who have ever been the vanguards of advancing civilization.

EPISODE I

Discovery by a Jesuit Priest .... John R. Leighty

The French gained a foothold in what is now Canada by colonizing up the St. Lawrence River while the English began their settlements farther South. Both looked forward to expansion Westward.

The French plan of conciliating the native Indians was to convert them to the Catholic Church and thus control them, while the English followed their usual plan of colonization of trading with the natives and when they wanted possession of the land they went thru the motions of buying it and making treaties.

The Indians were highly superstitious and of a religious nature so the French made considerable headway in establishing missions along with their fortified posts.

The foremost of these French missionaries who tried to prepare the way for white settlement of the territory northwest of the Ohio River and east of the Mississippi were Marquette, Joliet, Cadalac and Hennipin, while La Salle was working at the same time as a layman.

Our first episode deals with the work of Marquette and his fellow Jesuit Missionaries.

EPISODE II

"Athony Wayne Making it Safe for Settlement"

Anthony Wayne—Derwood Ridgway

In the year 1791 the Indian problem was perplexing and hard to solve.

But it was necessary to afford relief and protection to the Western settlements and so forces were organized and placed under command of General Anthony Wayne.

This valiant soldier had won great distinction in the Revolutionary War by his many deeds of valor and his wise management of troops at critical times. He was called "Mad Anthony" on account of his daring spirit but he had great sagacity and prudence, and during his campaigns against the Indians always endeavored to enter into reasonable and generous treaties with them before giving them battle.

Indian Camp Scene. Two Indians approach and light council fire. Chiefs follow and seat themselves about the fire. Few squaws seat themselves remote from fire.

Indian scout approaches the circle: "Brothers, the Chief-who never-sleeps approaches. Soon we shall hear his terms of peace."

Indians engage in conversation.

Gen. Wayne approaches: "Younger Brothers, I come to you from the Great Father at Washington, to make peace. Are you ready to listen to the terms?"

Little Turtle: "We will listen."

General Wayne reads the terms.

ARTICLE 7. All other lands between Fort Recovery and the setting sun shall belong to the several Indian tribes; for hunting, fishing and building their houses..

This treaty, entered into, this third day of August, 1795, shall seal the friendship and peace between the United States and the Indians of this region forever.

General Wayne: "Who were the true owners of this land? Who will first sign the treaty?"

Chippewa Chief: "Elder Brother, you asked who were the true owners of this land. In answer I tell you if any nation should call themselves the owners they would lie; our claim to it is equal; our Elder Brother has conquered it."

Little Turtle: "Elder Brother, you have pointed out to us the boundary line between the Indians and the United States, but I now take the privilege of informing you that the line cuts off from the Indians a large portion of country which has been enjoyed by my forefathers from time immemorial, without molestation or dispute."

Gen. Wayne: "I have read you the only terms of the Great Father. My soldiers are many. With only a part of them I defeated you at the Fallen Timbers. The White Man wants no more bloodshed; he wants the Red Man for a brother; but the terms are final. Another winter approaches and you need peace and time to hunt. I entreat you to lay down your arms, and experience the kindness and friendship of the United States of America, and the invaluable blessings of peace and tranquility."

Tecumseh: "I, Tecumseh the Shawnee, will sign the treaty."

Little Turtle: "I am Little Turtle, the Miami. I am the last to sign it, and I will be the last to break it."

EPISODE III—PART 1
The Early Settlers

Concord Twp. Sponsors, Mrs. Mary Krise, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick

(Script by Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick)

Westward, ever Westward, led by the flaming torch of the Spirit of the Wilderness, into the picturesque and fertile valley of the St. Joe River, came the early settlers, led by the Spirit of the Wilderness and ever with them Faith and Courage.

But as they gather round their camp fire, in the darkness of the evening thoughts of the future assail them, fear and danger seem to overshadowed them. Famine and Desolation and Death seem near them. But with the dawning of morning, Faith and Courage return to them again. Dark thoughts of the future are banished, and they are again led on by the tranquility and grandeur of the Spirit of Wilderness. They decide that here in this St. Joe Valley will they build them a home in the heart of the wilderness.

HERE—THIS SPOT—will they claim as a heritage for their children and their children's children.

EPISODE IV

Johnny Appleseed .... Clyde Hart

In the early part of the eighteenth century a strange personage by the name of John Chapman, better known as Johny Appleseed, dressed in a crude fashion, carrying his Bible, a huge bag of apple seeds, and accompanied by his faithful dog, pushed his way Westward from the New England States through Pennsylvania and Ohio in the territory of Indiana. Here he planted apple seeds in chosen places that future settlers might find fruits to satisfy their hungry mouths.

He then protected them from the wild animals by placing brush over them.

After his day's work was done he read a chapter from his Bible, and repeated the twenty-third Psalm.

He then retired for the night with his faithful dog as his only protection from Indians and wild animals.

After quoting his favorite verse from the Bible, he fed his faithful dog. He then moved on to new fields.

EPISODE V

The First Church .... Floyd Coburn

(Script by J. N. Scholes)

The Christian Church, now located at Coburn's Corners, was organized February 17, 1837, and was the first church organized in DeKalb County. Elder Benjamin Alton, who was the first minister of the gospel to locate in the county, effected its organization and became its first minister.

Eleven members composed the church: "Benjamin Alton, Sen. and his wife, Fanny Alton, and their two sons, Lorenzo D. Alton and Benjamin Alton, Jr., James Hadsell, Samuel Headley, Nancy Babcock, Asher W. Coburn and his wife, Hannah Coburn, John F. Coburn and his wife, Minerva Coburn, these eleven constituted the church."

The organization was completed "at the house of Brother Alton, a little log cabin, about 16x20, one and a half miles north of the corners, on the bank of the St. Joe River." It is now supposed that the "cabin" was located a little west of where the present highway contacts the river from the south, near the shallows in the stream, where was then a ford crossing the river into the Hamilton farm on the north side.

The "Old Stone," about four hundred feet east of the site, will serve as a witness to those who do not otherwise know the river at that point.

For long after the organization of the church worshipped in private homes of its members and friends, and in a school house that was built near the present church building. The present church needs no description—it was erected in the summer of 1860, and is one of the landmarks of the county. Since then it has been rebuilt and repaired, and is now the religious home of a thriving country people.

ST. JOE H. S. NINE DEFEATS ASHLEY IN INITIAL START

The local high school baseball team journeyed to Ashley Tuesday afternoon of last week and came home on the long end of a 2-1 score. It was the first game of the season for both teams.

St. Joe accumulated five hits off the pitching of Pressler three of them during the big 7th which netted them the two runs to win the ball game.

Ashley collected five hits off the pitching of Curie who pitched stellar ball for the "Valley Nine." He permitted no walks, allowed 5 hits and struck out 8. He especially showed his effectiveness in the 3rd. when with none down and the bases loaded, set the next three down in order.

The local boys had plenty of trouble solving the offerings of Pressler, the Ashley Ace. This fellow also accumulated 8 strikeouts and further attempted to aid his mates by clouting a home run in the 6th with no one aboard. This proved to be the only counter that Ashley could push across.

St. Joe Wins Second

The local Nine made it two in a row yesterday by taking Spencerville into camp, 20 to 5. Spencerville used three pitchers in a valiant attempt to stop the local sluggers but all to no avail.

Curie pitched a very consistent game for the Tigers, setting the opponents down with but four hits and issuing two free passes.

He was awarded excellent support by his mates both in the field and at the plate. Altogether the Valley Nine collected thirteen hits off the opposing pitchers. G. Walter enjoyed the spree most with two triples and a double to score 6 runs. St. Joe made it even more of a field day by stealing bases, and doing a good job of defensive work in the field.

Two more games remain on the fall card. Butler will be invaded next Friday. Waterloo will furnish the opposition here on the following Tuesday.

"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States."

That oath has been taken by every President of our country during its century and a half of glorious history.

It is a resolve renewed in spirit by millions of Americans as they observe the anniversary of the Constitution this year.

Why?

The words of our greatest Presidents themselves will tell us. Let's recall how they described and regarded that famous citadel of our liberties which they had sworn to defend.

George Washington:
"That precious depository of American happiness, the Constitution of the United States."

Thomas Jefferson:
"No Constitution was ever before so well calculated as ours for extensive empire and self-government."

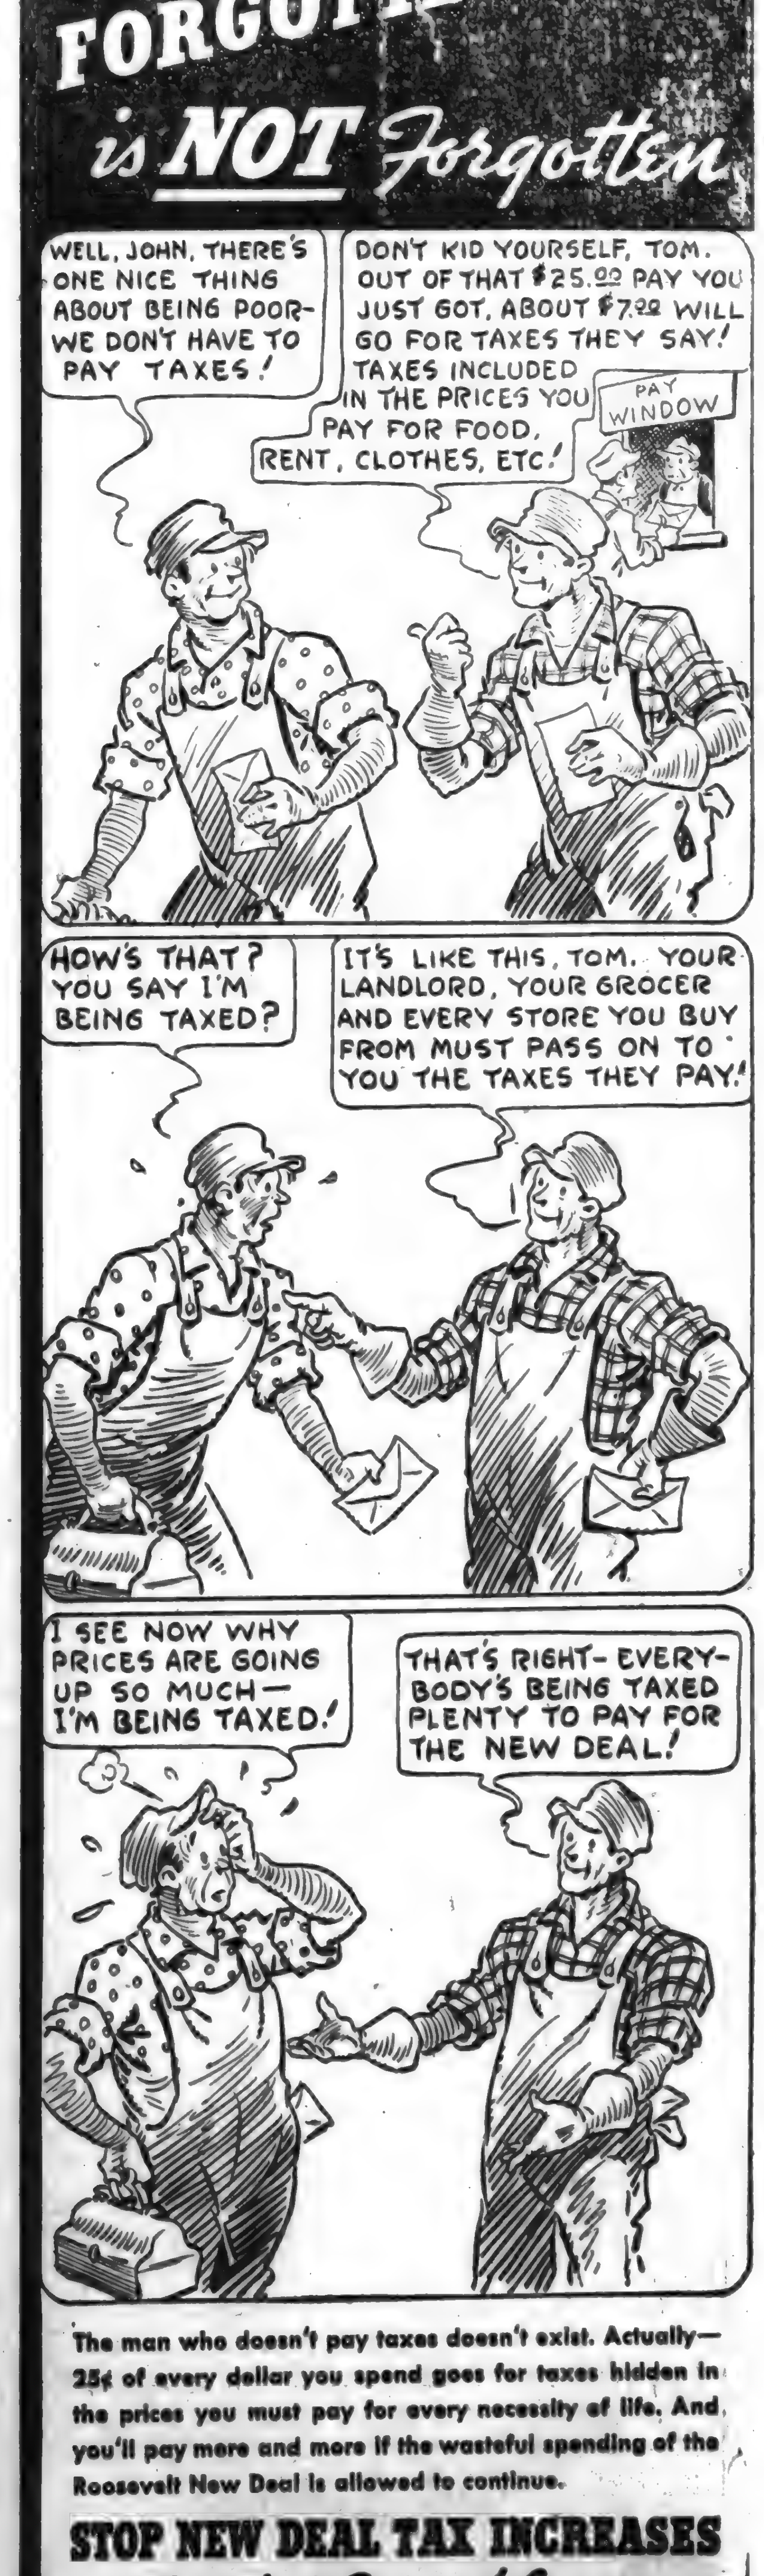
James Madison:
"The Constitution is a bill of powers, the great residuum being the rights of the people."

Abraham Lincoln:
"To the support of the Constitution let every American pledge his life, his property and his sacred honor."

Grover Cleveland:
"The oath I now take to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution not only impressively defines the great responsibilities I now assume, but suggests obedience to constitutional commands as the rule by which my official conduct must be guided."

Woodrow Wilson:
"Liberty cannot live apart from constitutional principle."

The Constitution of the United States is our Constitution. "We, the people," are not only its beneficiaries—we are also its guardians. On this anniversary let us, too, resolve to "preserve, protect and defend" it.



The FORGOTTEN MAN is NOT Forgotten
WELL, JOHN, THERE'S ONE NICE THING ABOUT BEING POOR- WE DON'T HAVE TO PAY TAXES!
DON'T KID YOURSELF, TOM. OUT OF THAT $25.00 PAY YOU JUST GOT, ABOUT $7.00 WILL GO FOR TAXES THEY SAY! TAXES INCLUDED IN THE PRICES YOU PAY FOR FOOD, RENT, CLOTHES, ETC.!
PAY WINDOW
HOW'S THAT? YOU SAY I'M BEING TAXED?
IT'S LIKE THIS, TOM. YOUR LANDLORD, YOUR GROCER AND EVERY STORE YOU BUY FROM MUST PASS ON TO YOU THE TAXES THEY PAY!
I SEE NOW WHY PRICES ARE GOING UP SO MUCH— I'M BEING TAXED!
THAT'S RIGHT- EVERYBODY'S BEING TAXED PLENTY TO PAY FOR THE NEW DEAL!

The man who doesn't pay taxes doesn't exist. Actually—25¢ of every dollar you spend goes for taxes hidden in the prices you must pay for every necessity of life. And you'll pay more and more if the wasteful spending of the Roosevelt New Deal is allowed to continue.

EPISODE VII

A Hustle for Bread. Characters: James Widney–D. Ridgway.
Cornelius Woodcox–C. C. Woodcox.

The first grist mill or "corn cracker," rather, was built by Wm. Mathews, on Bear Creek, in Concord Township. It was a small affair. The stones were about two feet in diameter and were turned by means of a "flutter wheel," on an upright post set in a tub, through one side of which the water passed.

The whole machinery was set in a small, rickety frame without weather-boarding. The corn dropped, a grain at a time, from the little hopper, so that perhaps in twenty-four hours, at a good stage of water, eight bushels of corn might be cracked.

The men came from opposite sides of the stage and met in the center of stage. Mr. Widney carries a sack of corn on his back.

Mr. Widney: "Hello, Mr. Woodcox."

Mr. Woodcox: "Corn bread at your place."

Mr. Widney: "Didn't you hear the joke about my trip to mill?"

Mr. Woodcox: "No, I guess I did not hear that."

Mr. Widney: "Well, I walked four miles from my brother's, up the river, and carried half a bushel of corn on my back. It was plumb noon before the grinding was finished and I went below to see how much meal was in the store box and what do you suppose I found?"

Mr. Woodcox: "Well, I would not know exactly."

Mr. Widney: "I found a large yellow dog was eating the meal as fast as it came from the spout." (both laughed.)

Mr. Woodcox: "Well, I bet that won't happen to-day."

Mr. Widney: "You just bet it won't."

EPISODE VIII

The Circuit Rider and the Country Doctor
Characters, ... Otto Ginther, Carl Perkins

In the early days, the "circuit rider" was much in evidence, in fact, for twenty-five or thirty years the safest and most convenient way to reach the different appointments was on horseback, and the pioneer preachers rarely made their appointments oftener than once every two weeks and in some cases, once in four weeks frequently holding services in private homes; or wherever a few people could be brought together.

The younger pastors of the present day can hardly comprehend the sacrifice and labor he was required to perform for the meager salary that he received. Yet the people of those days seemed to have, and I believe did have, a higher appreciation of the preached word than we do now.

The country doctor also shared the hardships, trials and privations of the circuit rider. They had much in common. While the circuit rider ministered to the sick soul the country doctor helped to rebuild bodies broken in health by fevers and wasted by malaria.

Who shall say which was the greater? Both men were unprepared for their work and incompetent in many ways but they fulfilled their destiny by giving to us examples of self-sacrifice and the spirit of service.

EPISODE IX

The Spirit of '61, Walter Whitehurst Post No. 283, American Legion

During that most trying period of our history, the Civil War, it is truly gratifying to know the St. Joe Valley can show so proud a record.

Newville Township was never brought under the draft, as they furnished their full quota by voluntary enlistment. And only one was drafted in Concord Township.

An enthusiastic spirit of loyalty and patriotism ascended like incense from the Valley.

EPISODE X

The Changes of Transportation .... Harry Kees

Then forward men and women! Let the bell of progress echo through each wakened mind!

Let the grand chorus through our numbers swell—
Who will not hasten shall be left behind!
Who conquers shall a crown of glory find;
Who falls, if faithful, shall but fall to rise
Free from the tear-drenched clay that clogs mankind,
To where new triumphs greet his eager eyes;
Forward will ever be the watchword of the skies!

... RETROSPECTIVE ...

THE PROLOGUE:—Miss Eunice Shilling, as "Miss St. Joe Valley," was a beautiful queen in her white and silver costume. Her attendants were also charming. They were dressed in pale yellow trimmed with glittering gold. The costumes were designed and supervised by the sponsor, Mrs. C. C. Woodcox.

EPISODE ONE:—John R. Leighty as the Jesuit Priest, was a striking figure. He wore a priest's black robe and a wide brimmed black hat. The silver cross worn with the costume matched his silver-white hair.

He was accompanied by an Indian guide (Ray. Reasoner) who looked very realistic. He wore a red and grey Indian blanket and feather head dress, and carried a rifle with powder horn that dated back to pioneer days.

Marquette had just established a new Mission at Kaskaskia on the Illinois River after a massacre of the Miami Indians by the famous Iriquois, and was on his way back to his base Mision at Macinac. The scene was laid at a spot on the trail from the Kankakee River to Fort Miami on Lake Michigan at the mouth of the St. Joseph River.

Marquette had been ill for weeks and while sitting down to rest told his faithful guide what he was trying to accomplish for the good of the Indians and the white settlers who would come into the new land. He seemed to know that his work was about ended and wished his guide to use his influence with the friendly Indians to have it carried on. Marquette died on his journey shortly after leaving Fort Miami.

EPISODE TWO:—The setting for this Episode was especially beautiful. Against a background of trees and shrubs was seen Indian tee-pees. Squaws and their off-spring were near the tee-pees. In the foreground was a large camp fire. A group of Indian braves surrounded the fire. Their costuming was excellent as was also their coloring due to the clever make up by Mrs. Priscilla Simanton.

General Anthony Wayne, (Derwood Ridgway,) wore a beautiful costume which was tailored in New York City.

EPISODE THREE:—The grouping of the three Townships' representatives made this a pretentious Episode. The large stage space was filled with covered wagons, horses, horse back riders, torch bearers, Indians and symbolical characters. The crowd derived much pleasure in watching the trained horse ridden by Walter Baker.

EPISODE FOUR:—This religious Episode was beautiful and impressive. Some of the best costuming and historical portrayal of the Pageant was found in this Episode.

EPISODE FIVE:—The eccentric character of "Johnny Appleseed" was perfectly presented by Clyde Hart. His work came very near to the high mark of a professional. The faithful dog "Wolf" added much to the picture.

EPISODE SIX:—One of the most pleasurable parts of the Pageant. The beautiful bride, (Fern Draggoo,) the handsome groom, (DuWayne Kinsey,) the sedate preacher, (Earl Kinsey,) and the merry makers, all in appropriate costumes, made a colorful Episode. After extending felicitations to the newly weds the happy, rolicing strains of the fiddler, (Mark Morr,) were heard. Three sets were formed for an old fashioned dance and when the caller (Roy Wade,) said: "Salute your partners" many on old timer longed to join the fun.

EPISODES SEVEN and EIGHT:—were well given by the Circuit Rider, (O. E. Ginther,) and the Country Doctor, (Carl Perkins.) These characters were well chosen and were of interest to the audience, entering on their horses and portraying their parts in pantomime.

EPISODE NINE:—Was the surprise Episode. Not many Civil War veterans are with us now and certainly very few in this whole nation who can so ably entertain a large crowd of people.

David Perry, 90, Hicksville, Ohio, a Civil War Veteran, gave a number of amusing war time reminiscences and sang a song popular between 1861–1865. Mr. Perry was exceptionally active and his participation brought a great cheer from the vast audience.

EPISODE TEN:—Presented a definite idea of some of the proprogress of the Valley. From the covered wagon and ox team as modes of travel, then came horse back riders, horse carts, bicycles, and later the first automobile and on down to the 1936 automobiles.

One of the outstanding contributions toward the success of the Pageant was the work of the announcer, Leon H. Kees.

It was his first effort in Pageant announcing but the clear understanding way he read the script was most gratifying to his sponsors.

The Pageant was given west of the Concord Township High School buildings where the grounds made a natural ampitheatre. Seats were provided on the east slope for hundreds of the spectators and in this way all were able to see. Automobiles were parked on the south and the vast area on the west and north.

The tremendous crowd proved that the advertising had been effective and that the St. Joe Valley had again won the attention of citizens for many miles.

An interesting historical fact in connection with the Pageant, "One Hundred Years of Progress" was that of ten families living in DeKalb County in 1836—100 years ago—nine had settled along the St. Joe River between what is now Newville and Spencerville.

ANOTHER ARRESTED ON LARCENY CHARGE

Ray Hart of Near Newville, is Suspected of Series of Thefts on Farms in DeKalb County

Another series of farm thefts is believed to have been cleared up with the arrest of Ray Hart, living a mile and a half north of Newville.

Hart is accused in an affidavit filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm with stealing 70 rods of wire fencing from the Shilling farm a mile and a half south of Concord. Mr. Shilling identified the fence as his own. Hart insists that he bought the fence from a mail order house, but said he would plead guilty to stealing it. The affidavit is for grand larceny, the value of the fence being $40.

The officers also suspect Hart of at least fifteen thefts of poultry and grain but he refuses to admit any such crimes. There is no question in the opinion of the officers but that he had an accomplice, but he will not name anybody. The fencing was in two rolls of 40 and 30 rods and weighed several hundred pounds.

Investigating the numerous reports from farmers of chickens and grain being taken, Sheriff Grimm, his deputy, C. M. Minnich, and Al Teutsch and Ed Rose of the state police suspected Hart and searched his premises. The fencing erected around Hart's orchard attracted them and Mr. Shilling, who had made a report that his fencing, ready to put up, had disappeared from a field during a night last May, was summoned and identified it. The officers also found Hart had 25 sacks in his barn that had held chickens. It was also revealed that Hart had recently sold about 350 bushels of wheat, which was 100 bushels more than he had raised in the last two years. The wheat was sold at different times at Hicksville, O., Butler and Waterloo.

Hart is about 45 years of age and has been in trouble before. He served time for bootlegging while living in Defiance county, Ohio, and walked away from the workhouse. He and his wife, Edna, were arrested in DeKalb county in 1931 for the unlawful sale of liquor and each was fined $100 and sentenced to the state farm for ninety days. His wife has since died.

Invisible Taxes

"We cannot buy a stitch of clothing without the government's taking in taxes a part of the money we pay out. We cannot buy an ounce of food at our grocery store without being taxed to support the government. We cannot go to a movie, or to a baseball game, or ride in an automobile without this invisible tax arm of government reaching out and taking a part of the money we spend."—Alf M. Landon at Buffalo, N. Y., August 26, 1936.

"Isms" Bring Grief —Not Freedom

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

The worried theorists who have been asking us to dilute our Constitutional form of government with strong injections of Communism, Fascism and the other isms of Europe, had better stop pointing with pride to their models.

Certainly the average American sees nothing alluring in the recent history of those continental nations whose philosophies we are urged to adopt.

To that history Spain has been adding a new chapter for all the world to read. Its tragic text is written in the blood of the very workers whom the new isms promise to save.

Is this unusual? Think back over recent years and you have the answer. The cruel guerrilla warfare that established Communism in Eastern Europe, and the "purges" of Central Europe are still fresh in the memory of every adult.

And what has been gained? What have the regimented millions now under the thumbs of Soviets or Dictators achieved, for which the American citizen would swap the constitutional guaranties won and established by the Founders of our Nation?

The American Revolution was fought for Freedom — freedom of speech, freedom of religion, freedom to govern ourselves, to direct our own lives and our own affairs. That freedom was won— and perpetuated in our Constitution.

But whether Fascism, or Communism, or any other ism, wins in Europe, Freedom loses. In its place come intolerance, oppression and bloodshed.

The theorists who ask us to weaken our Constitution so those alien philosophies may be incorporated in our government, not only ignore the evidence now glaringly apparent abroad — they fail to understand either the American people or American history.

I am going to ask a question here on the consumption of gasoline, as it is considered in the speed your car is traveling.

When do you consume the least amount of gas?

(a) At 60 miles an hour, because you are getting somewhere?

(b) At 50 miles an hour?

(c) At 30 miles an hour?

Statisticians have given this considerable thought. Gasoline companies report that a car which gets 18 miles per gallon at 30 miles an hour gets only 13 miles at 50 and 10 miles at 60.

Some of you speeders who brag about covering mileage at unusual speed to the discomfort of pedestrians and the passengers in your car are doing so not only at an increased cost but also at increased hazards.

Take it easy!

Protect Freedom at Polls: Landon

Dictatorship Leads to War, He Warns; Lauds GOP Platform.

PORTLAND, ME.—The Presidential election will be a choice between free enterprise under which the humblest citizen has a chance, and a system of invasion of private rights characterized by a million signs: "By Order of the American Government, Keep Off!" declared Gov. Alf M. Landon in a speech before a vast throng here.

He defined the issues of the campaign:

"Do we want the Government prying into every little detail of our business lives?

"Do we want the Government forbidding us to plant what we want in our own fields?

"Or:

"Do we want to be free to plan for our future?

"Do we want free government in America?"

Coming of European System.

Under the American system of free enterprise, Gov. Landon said, people have been free to plan for themselves and their children, knowing that their goal was limited only by their own ability, subject to no handicap of birth or class distinction. But, he pointed out:

"Then came the N.R.A.! With the enactment of this measure in 1933, our government, without mandate of the people, adopted a new and completely different philosophy. When I say 'new', I mean new only in the sense that it was new to this country. It was a philosophy well known under the autocratic governments of Europe.

"This philosophy decreed that prices should be regulated," said Gov. Landon, "not by demand and supply, but by government edict; that wages and hours of employees should be fixed, not by free and fair negotiations under rules assuring equality, but by officials in Washington; that the sort of competition which must be fostered, as the life-blood of free enterprise, should in future be prohibited by law . . .

NRA Lives On.

"What the N.R.A. really undertook to do in this country was to terminate our system of free competition, and to substitute for it a system of government-created and government - protected monopolies . . .

"The N.R.A. was the beginning in America of the movement which, throughout the world, has been sweeping aside private enterprise in favor of government control—a movement which has been substituting arbitrary personal authority for constitutional self-government.

"But—you may say—the N.R.A. is dead.

"True enough. The National Industrial Recovery Act is dead, thanks to the courage and integrity of the Supreme Court.

"But the spirit of the N.R.A. lives on. It lives on in recently enacted laws. It lives on in the efforts of the Administration to get around the decisions of the Supreme Court. It lives on in this Administration's 1936 platform. It lives on in the recent public utterances of the President and his spokesmen.

May Lead to War.

"But above all, it lives on in the spirit of the President who has confessed no error—who has let it be clearly known that he considered it would be a catastrophe if the American farmer should 'once more become a lord on his own farm' . . .

"It was no accident that Congress delegated its functions to the President. . . .

"Power of this magnitude is dangerous from the economic as well as from the political point of view. No man's judgment is sufficiently infallible to justify giving him control—either in private business or in government—over the standard of living, the savings, and the destiny of his fellow citizens. When the decision of one man affects an entire country, a wrong decision means national disaster.

"The Republican Party opposes unlimited executive power for another reason. This reason is that the world-wide trend away from democracy means but one thing—that one thing is WAR. Any weakening of democracy here, means the final rout of democracy everywhere. . . .

"The temper of the American public is no longer complacent. It has definitely set its face against monopoly and unfair trade practices. The pledge in our platform is not mere words. It does not mean to me fruitless inquisitions that impede recovery and delay re-employment. To me it means not only the steady relentless enforcement of existing laws but the strengthening of those laws. And it means the enactment of such additional legislation as is necessary to put an end to monopoly, unfair trade practices and all special privilege. Only if we follow this course can we escape the system of government regulated monopolies sponsored by this Administration.

"If you do not believe this, you had better not vote for me. For I am pledged by the Republican platform to save our system of free enterprise."

J. H. SYLVESTER AND WIFE CHARGED WITH FRAUD

Mrs. Jas. H. Sylvester, of Elm St., Ft. Wayne, was taken into custody Thursday night by Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm on a charge of obtaining money by false pretenses. Her husband was not at home at the time, but he was arrested Friday morning.

Sylvester formerly lived west of Garrett and was tried at one time for implication in the theft of an automobile. For some years he was located in Spencer township, living east of Coburntown on the old Hadsell farm, but moved to Ft. Wayne several months ago.

According to the complaint, Dade Mitchener owed Sylvester $25 for stallion fees and Sylvester made an assignment to the City National bank of Auburn. It is claimed that afterward Mrs. Sylvester collected the money due from Mitchener and the alleged fraud was discovered when the bank tried to collect from Mitchener.

Names of witnesses endorsed on the affidavit prepared by Prosecuting Attorney Geo. E. Mountz besides that of Mitchener are Earl Stimman and H. M. Casebeer. The latter is cashier of the bank.

SAVE AND DRY SEED CORN THIS FALL

Farmers of DeKalb County are urged to save plenty of seed corn this fall to meet requirements from Indiana and other states. Proper storage and drying of seed corn this fall is the best insurance of corn of high germination next spring.

Poor pollination of seed ears should not discourage the saving of such ears for seed. Irregular grains are as true to variety as flat grains, and will grow just as good if properly dried.

L. L. C.

The Ladies' Literary Club of St. Joe held its initial meeting of the year 1936-37 last Wednesday night at the home of the re-elected president, Mrs. Frank Curie. The other officers, including the Mesdames William Staman, vice president; Miss Violet May, recording seecretary; J. P. Buckingham, corresponding secretary; Inez Hadsell, treasurer; Fred B. Leighty, critic, and C. C. Woodcox, parliamentarian, ably assisted as hostesses of the evening.

The members always look forward to the socialability of the first meeting each year, happy to gather again after the summer recess. According to custom, the first meeting is a surprise program, which usualty causes much speculation ahead. On this particular evening each hostess had been asked to donate a feature number to the entertainment and to keep it secret. Consequently nobody at all had the slightest idea of the entire program, which was a partial surprise even to the hostesses.

Mrs. Frank Curie opened the meeting with a cordial welcome, full of charming quotations that left an inspiration for the ensuing year. Then Miss Violet May introduced her two nieces, the little Misses Eileen and Laverne May, aged five and seven, who entertained cleverly with songs and dramatic readings. Mrs. J. P. Buckingham read some descriptive poetry on flowers, after which she presented a basket of beautiful garden flowers to the club president as a token of esteem.

Mrs. Inez Hadsell read a paper on education, afterwards conducting an interesting contest. Mrs. C. C. Woodcox gave two humorous readings which were greatly appreciated. A favorite arrangement of an old Morris dance was played as a piano solo by Mrs. Fred Leighty; following this was a travel log by Miss Janalyce Rouls. Miss Rouls had for each member a sample of Chinese rice brought from Chinatown, San Francisco, this summer along with instructions for cooking.

A brief business session was held before the meeting closed officially. While the ladies were visiting, the hostesses served dainty refreshments. Mrs. L. E. Wilberne was a special guest for the evening, as also were the emeritus members.

THE ST. JOE VALLEY TO ENTER PARADE

It goes without saying that the St. Joe Valley will be in the Free Fall Fair Parade this year with a bigger and better show than ever before.

Not much has been said about it but the number of persons who have said they were getting ready makes sure of a fine show.

The Valley has certainly profited by what has been done to advertise it and full advantage should be taken to keep the ball rolling now since we have a good start toward letting the outside world know what a wonderful territory the St. Joe Valley is.

Each year more and more buyers are coming here from the outside looking for all sorts of things the Valley produces. All this means that money is brought in from the outside and spent here in the Valley where every one gets some part of it so the benefit is not only to the person who sells to an out side buyer but to every one in the county as well as we who are lucky enough to live in the Valley.

Every one of us have an interest in this work of putting the Valley on the business map whether we are producers or not, so boost the Valley activities all you can, You may have different ideas as to what should be done but they are no benefit unless put in motion. So get in and help think and do.

All the towns nearby are benefitted and should boost us because they share in the benefits. Come on Garrett, Auburn, Waterloo, Butler, Hicksville, and help let the world know where a good part of your income comes from and how the St. Joe Valley brings in its customers from Cleveland, Akron, Columbus, Dayton, Hamilton, Cincinnati, Vincennes and Indianapolis, because the Valley producers have regular customers in all these places and many more within this area.

HURRY is the greatest driving hazard.

Hurry brings on nervous tension, and high speed through congested areas brings on hazards that the average driver cannot cope with.

Speed does not always get you to your destination. Some people have never reached their destination after starting out on a fast drive. Somewhere in between they had a smashup, and the undertaker called for them and carried on their journey in a hearse.

Before you tackle excessive speeds,—THINK.

Insurance Head Warns of Inflation

Says Continued Government Borrowing Threatens Policy Holders.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—M. A. Linton, president of the $300,000,000 Provident Mutual Life Insurance company, warned policy holders of the danger of inflation resulting from the Roosevelt administration's program of expanding bank deposits through federal borrowing.

His statement, printed in the company's magazine, was similar to many made by Col. Frank Knox, Republican candidate for the vice-presidency, charging that New Deal spending of two dollars for every one taken in threatens the savings of millions of Americans. It followed on the heels of the President's "non-political" conference of insurance company heads in an attempt to offset apprehension aroused by the Knox charges.

The belligerent Colonel's latest blast, made at Helena, Mont., was:

"I repeat that under the present policies of this administration no life insurance policy is secure, no savings account is safe, because the present spending policy leads straight to inflation. It is not the insurance companies or the savings banks that are unsound. They are as safe as the Rock of Gibraltar. It is the administration of the United States government that is unsound."

Mr. Linton warned that insurance policy holders have a precious interest in balancing the budget of the United States.

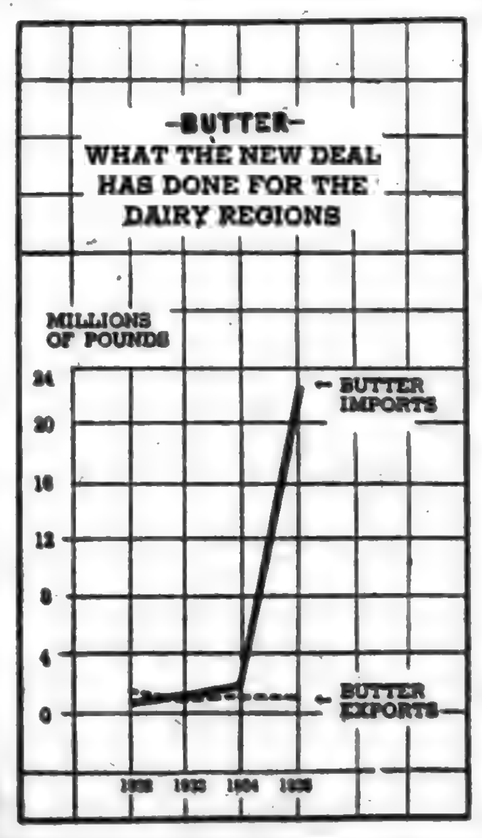
"The essence of life insurance," he said, "is a promise by the life insurance companies to pay dollars in the future when a given contingency shall occur. The policy holder knows that the dollars of the future are going to be used to purchase the food, clothing, and shelter that his dependents will need if he is called away by death, or that he and his wife will need after his earning days are over.

"To maintain a sound currency a nation must live within its income. Emergencies may make extensive borrowing necessary in times of depression. However, the longer the borrowing is continued the graver the danger that the situation will get out of hand and lead to disaster."

A. A. Ballantine, former undersecretary of the treasury, in a statement issued from Chicago, charged the Roosevelt administration with sacrificing the security of policy holders and bank depositors upon the political block.

"Mr. Roosevelt knows which side his bread is buttered on politically," said Mr. Ballantine. "If it is necessary to plunge this nation so deeply into debt by reckless and politically minded spending that printing press money is the only logical outcome, he will do it unflinchingly—even if it makes a piece of waste paper every life insurance policy and savings bank book in the United States."

Butter Imports Up



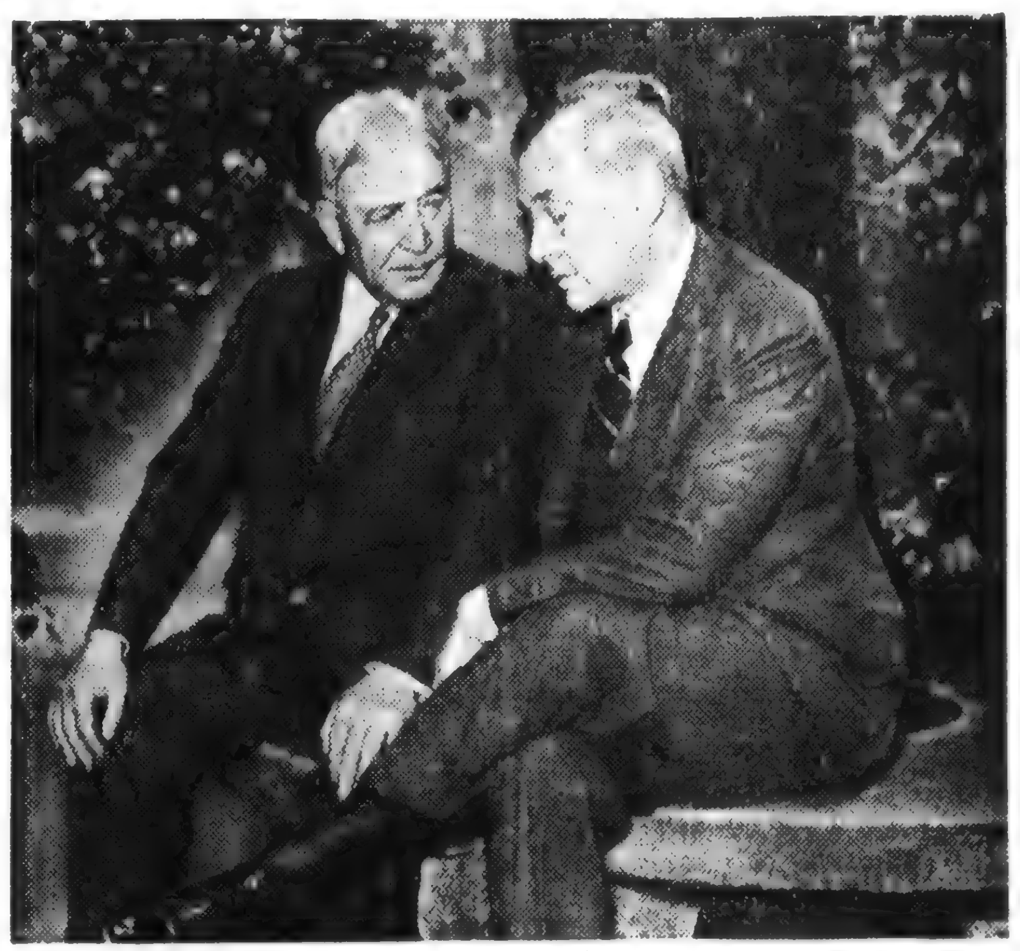
Says GOP Platform Will Save Sugar Beet Farms

SCOTTS BLUFF, Neb.—President Roosevelt has attempted to hamstring the sugar beet industry of the West, Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg declared here. He cited the establishment of quotas favoring Cuban and Philippine sugar producers, the horizontal decrease of 25 per cent in the sugar tariff, and the reduction of the sugar tariff in the Cuban reciprocal trade agreement to the lowest point in a half century.

The Republican party, he said, offers the domestic sugar producer a program which will apply restrictive quotas to continental imports only, and which will permit the American producer the non-competitive privilege of producing all the domestic sugar which the domestic market can consume.

"You need nothing else," said Senator Vandenberg. "It would be the greatest possible single practical contribution to 'farm relief' in a score of sugar states, including the great 'sugar bowl area' to which I am speaking."

Lowden Will Stump for Landon



CHICAGO.—Frank O. Lowden (left), former governor of Illinois, announced that he will take the stump for Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, with whom he is shown here, in the latter's campaign for the Presidency. Mr. Lowden, a pioneer in soil conservation and beloved by Middle Western farmers, will make his first speech at Waterloo, Iowa, Oct. 6. It will be broadcast nationally.

FROM ABOUT ST. JOE

If its news, give it to us.

Last week for several days Mr. and Mrs. Harry Kees, son, Leon, and family visited Mr. Kees' relatives in Eastern Ohio, going to the old homestead one owned by his grandparents. They journeyed on thru Ohio, West Virginia, and into Pennsylvania. In Pittsburgh they visited Mrs. Vera Heighn Sewell, formerly a teacher with Mrs. Leon Kees, in Butler city schools.

Saturday night will conclude the free moving pictures in the open air, due to the uncertainty of the weather. Splendid crowds have made St. Joe their summer trading center on Saturday nights and on the other hand the crowds have appreciated the efforts of the local merchants in providing an entertaining program during the summer months. The public should continue to come to St. Joe as the merchants will provide some special drawing cards for them regularly.

Washington is preparing for what probably will be the last reunion of the Grand Army of the Republic. It will be a sobered and far from spectacular proceeding. Seventy-one years have passed since the close of the Civil War. The veterans of the World War are active and numerous, but they should do some thinking as they view the G. A. R. celebration. The army of Time stands with fixed bayonets, against which no charge can prevail, and in that conflict there will be no Armistice Day.

Seed From Canada Makes Joke of Wallace Warning

CHICAGO.—Continued dumping of Canadian alfalfa and clover seed makes a "ghastly joke" of the department of agriculture's warning against unadapted and misbranded seed importations, declared Congressman Clifford R. Hope, director of the Republican National committee's farm division here.

"This belated warning should have been sent to the state department, rather than the newspapers," said Mr. Hope. "Or better, it should have been issued when Henry Wallace was working with Secretary Hull on the Canadian trade agreements.

"In the first six months of this year, the Canadians shipped 618,439 pounds of seed into this country. In the same period of 1935 they shipped only 1,780 pounds."

Marimae Invests $1 in Future Security

CHICAGO.—Marimae Voiland, four years old, of Topeka, Kan., playmate of Nancy Jo, the small daughter of Governor Landon, is taking the approaching election seriously.

"I want Nancy Jo's daddy to be the next President," she wrote C. B. Goodspeed, treasurer of the Republican National committee. "Please use this dollar from my savings bank to help elect him."

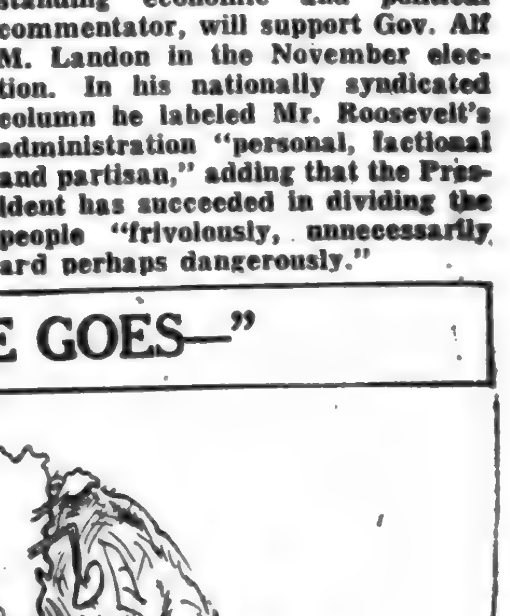
Lippmann for Landon



A Roosevelt supporter four years ago, Walter Lippmann (above), outstanding economic and political commentator, will support Gov. Alf M. Landon in the November election. In his nationally syndicated column he labeled Mr. Roosevelt's administration "personal, factional and partisan," adding that the President has succeeded in dividing the people "frivolously, unnecessarily and perhaps dangerously."

Baltimore Sun Drops Roosevelt

BALTIMORE, MD.—The Baltimore Sun, for nearly 100 years one of the nation's leading Democratic newspapers, has announced that in this campaign it is "unable to advocate the re-election of President Roosevelt."

Its reasons were stated in an editorial, from which excerpts follow:

"This statement is made with regret. But we cannot close our eyes to what we conceive to have been fundamental errors in Mr. Roosevelt's policies.

"In April, 1933, Mr. Roosevelt began to turn away from the spirit, and to a large extent the letter, of his platform and from the spirit of his first acts as President. He inaugurated the New Deal and he based it upon vaguely formed and superficially considered ideas of planned economy. These ideas were directed toward nationalistic limitation of economic life and toward overriding Federal control of economic life within this nation.

"Does Governor Landon believe that the fundamental policy to which the Government should commit itself is a genuine competitive system, with such liberal adjustments in lower tariff policies, in debt policies, in credit policies, in currency stabilization policies, in law-enforcement policies and in labor policies as will promote the kind of competition that is healthy and real?

"In The Sun's opinion, there is reason to believe that he does. His brief confession of faith at his birthplace pointed in that direction."

LANDON ACKNOWLEDGES LARGE POSTCARD

Mrs. E. G. Gordon, of Auburn, secretary and treasurer of the Young Republican Club of DeKalb County, is in receipt of a personal letter from Alf M. Landon, Republican Candidate for President, acknowledging receipt of the postcard signed by more than 500 members of the Young Republican organization of DeKalb County and forwarded to Governor Landon.

Governor Landon's letter reads as follows:

Mrs. E. G. Gordon, Sec.-Treas.,
Young Republican Club,
DeKalb Co., Auburn, Ind.

Dear Mrs. Gordon:

"It gives me pleasure indeed to acknowledge receipt of the 'post card' signed by more than 500 members of your Young Republican organization.

"Not only am I happy to have the good wishes and pledge of support of your members, but it encourages me to see graphically displayed the strength of your club.

"Young people generally have much at stake in this election; more than they have had in previous ones. Young people will necessarily be forced to shoulder the major part of the burden of taxation which will inevitably follow the present administration's program of wastefulness and extravagance.

"I am happy to know that the young people of your County, cognizant of that fact, have bound themselves together to combat a perpetuation of the administration now in power."

Yours very truly,
(Signed) Alf M. Landon,
Governor.

COW DISAPPEARS IN OLD WELL

The yearling heifer, advertised as having strayed or was stolen from the Lester Houck farm in Jackson township, was finally found after an absence of nine days. Tracing a faint bawling, Mrs. Frank Pervines discovered the animal in an old well, at a place, where years ago, was located an old saw mill. The well had been filled up, farmed over in past years and now sod had covered the place. Because of the dry weather, the dirt had sunk and when the heifer was grazing the top gave away and she was held captive. The hole was partly filled with water and being square type plank box, the cow was able to move about some.

When discovered, ropes were used to extricate the cow from the pit. She was very weak, but was soon able to walk to the house and is now recoveirng from her experience.

DON'T BLAME YOUR BAKER because Bread is UP on Stilts

REPRESENTATIVE SAMUEL PETTINGILL of Indiana, in a radio address, has dramatically illustrated what a small item in the family budget is the cost of electricity. He said, "The cold fact is that the increase in the cost of food alone—not the cost but the increase in the cost—in the past two years has been five times the total cost of light and power in the American home." Bread is up 24% and the average increase in cost of a single pound of butter since April, 1933, according to the U. S. Department of Commerce, amounts to 8 cents. Not the price of butter, but the increase in price is approximately equal to the average daily cost of electricity for a whole family served by this company.

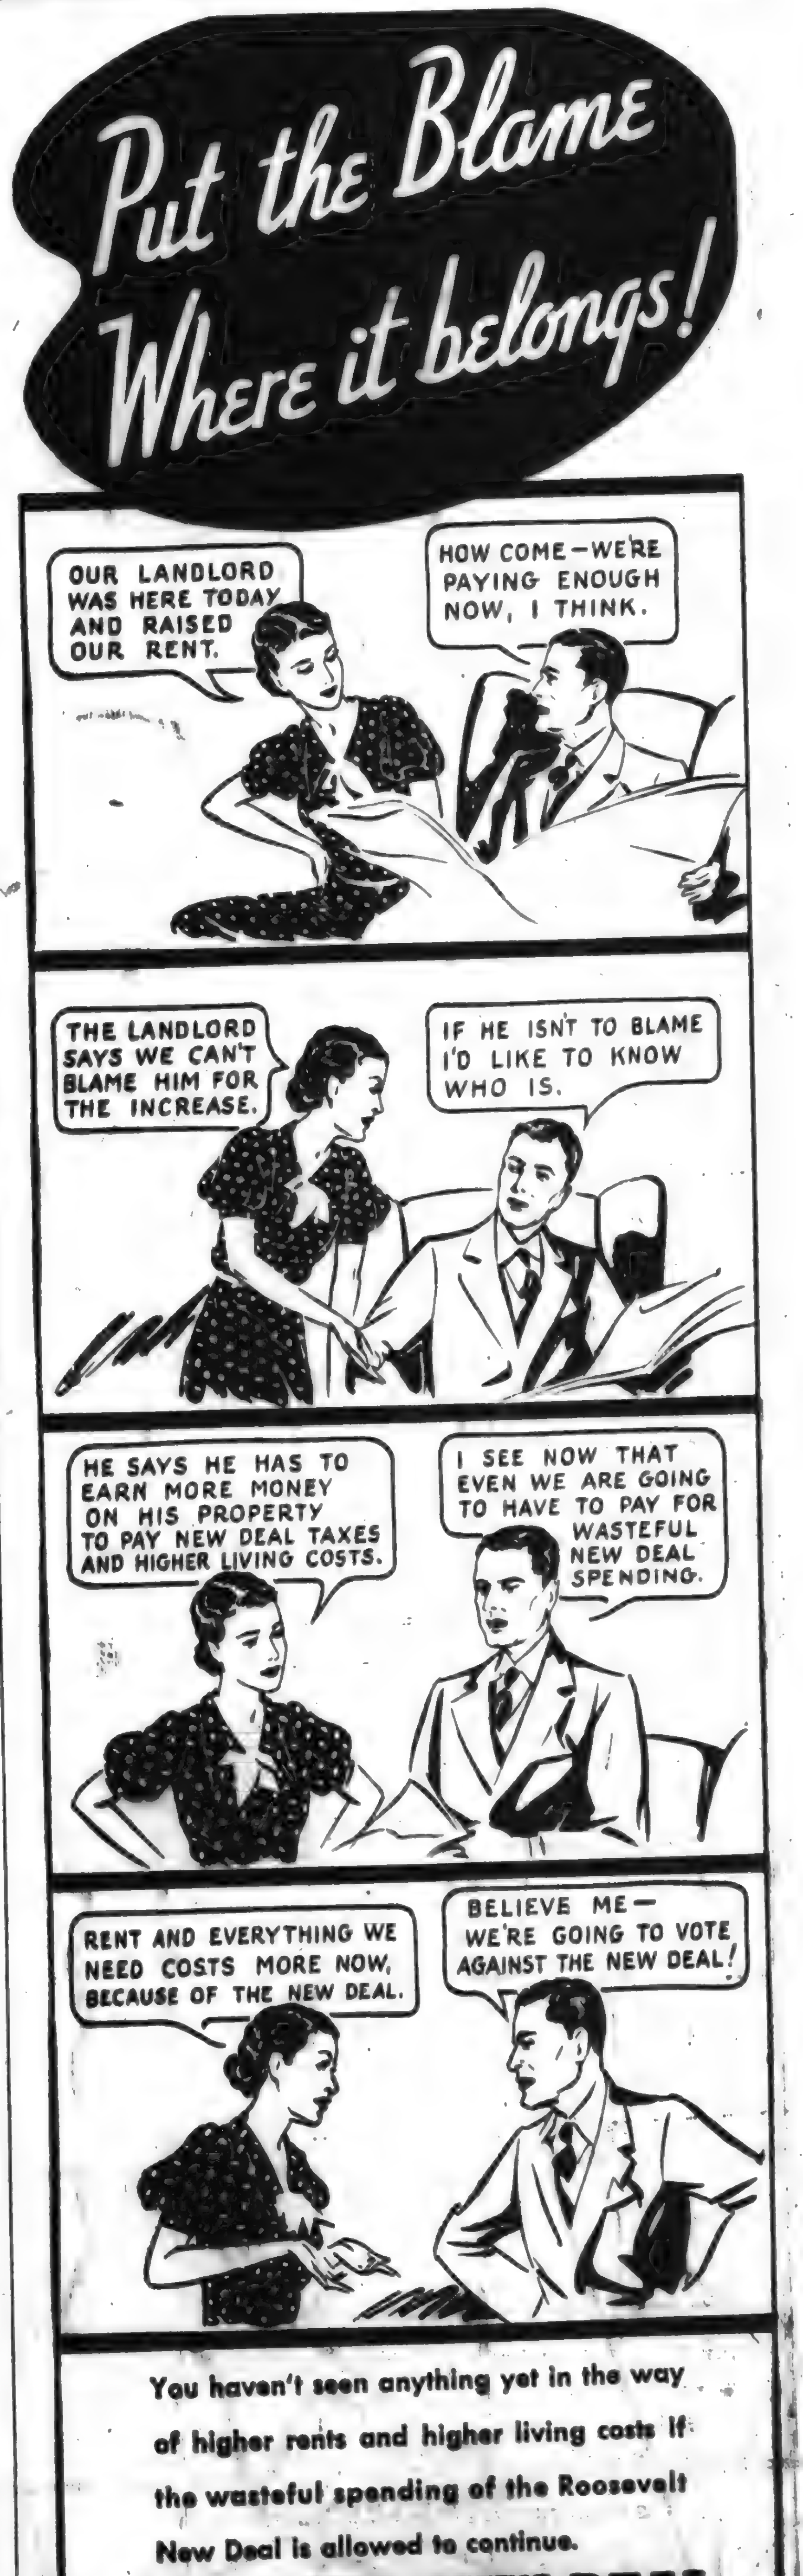
Mark Williams was bitten by a dog Tuesday while making the huckster route for Harvey Hull, who is away. As he approached a country home the dog barked and said: "Who are you?" Mark politely answered, "I'm your huckster, taking the place of Harvey, who is away." The dog shied around and then proceeded to land on Mark. Nothing serious, but some what provoked, Mark stated that there would be some real news should he ever meet up with the dog again.



Put the Blame Where it belongs!
OUR LANDLORD WAS HERE TODAY AND RAISED OUR RENT.
HOW COME—WE'RE PAYING ENOUGH NOW, I THINK.
THE LANDLORD SAYS WE CAN'T BLAME HIM FOR THE INCREASE.
IF HE ISN'T TO BLAME I'D LIKE TO KNOW WHO IS.
HE SAYS HE HAS TO EARN MORE MONEY ON HIS PROPERTY TO PAY NEW DEAL TAXES AND HIGHER LIVING COSTS.
I SEE NOW THAT EVEN WE ARE GOING TO HAVE TO PAY FOR WASTEFUL NEW DEAL SPENDING.
RENT AND EVERYTHING WE NEED COSTS MORE NOW, BECAUSE OF THE NEW DEAL.
BELIEVE ME— WE'RE GOING TO VOTE AGAINST THE NEW DEAL!

You haven't seen anything yet in the way of higher rents and higher living costs if the wasteful spending of the Roosevelt New Deal is allowed to continue.

WITH OUR CLUB LADIES

L. L. C.

The Girl Scouts of St. Joe entertained the Ladies' Literary Club at the home of their leader, Mrs. J. R. Goldsmith, last Wednesday evening, at an interesting meeting that was well attended.

The meeting was called to order by the Literary Club president, Mrs. Frank Curie, who called for the reading of the club collect. Then the Girl Scouts, dressed attractively in Scout attire, presented several skits and a clever play, all of which stressed the important elements learned by the girls in Scout work. Miss Janalyce Rouls also took part in the play, which was entitled, "Mr. Every Man Takes a Wife." During the program presented by the Scouts Frances Reidenbach sang a group of songs, accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Goldsmith.

Following this entertainment a brief business meeting was held. A rising vote of thanks was paid to the Girl Scouts in appreciation of their royal entertainment and gracious hospitality. Mrs. L. E. Wilberne was voted into active membership of the Literary Club.

On exhibit during the evening were displays of Scout work in handcrafts, table setting, nature study, health charts, and first aid. The exhibits proved doubly interesting when explained by the Scouts themselves.

Later in the evening the hostesses served dainty refreshments that carried out their Scout colors effectively; the individual cakes were topped with the Scout emblem done in colorful icing.

Girl Scouts who participated in the evening's entertainment were: Helen Goodwin, Marcia Wade, Beverly Wade, Jacqueline Shull, Winifred Jones, Leila Hurni, Frances Reidenbach, Ruth and Myra Keesler, Patricia Maxwell, Stella Hart, Candace Loftus, and Jean and June Goldsmith. Mrs. Madeline Scott and Mrs. Cleota Crick were special guests at the party.

The Ladies' Literary Club has helped to sponsor the local Scout troop from the date of its organization, so the evening was of special interest to everyone present.

The Safety Man

I would like to add at this time some comments on the conduct of children in the matter of school bus transportation. They must be taught to heed the patrols, to obey the driver, and to observe classroom conduct in the bus.

Parents should instruct their children accordingly. Their manners must be taught to them by their teachers and every one of them should be so instructed that he knows what is expected of him.

Pupils should be on time in the morning to avoid delaying the bus; they should never stand in the road while waiting for a bus; they should not carry on unnecessary conversation with the driver of the bus; they should never throw waste paper or rubbish on the floor of the bus; they should never extend their arms or heads out the windows; they should report to the driver at once any damage done to the bus.

Obey the driver of the bus, children! He is your guide and safety advisor while on the bus.

CARD OF THANKS

Our thanks and appreciation go to our many frieds for their words of sympathy in the loss of our infant baby. Also to Rev. Koehnlein for his splendid message and to those who contributed flowers, we humbly say, thank you.

AUTUMN COLORS TO BE BEST IN YEARS

A prediction that the autumn coloring in Indiana will be exceptionally attractive this year has been made. Reports from officials of the state parks, forests and other properties during the past week indicate that only a series of heavy rains will destroy the "fall show."

Southern Indiana with its large expanse of forests is visited each fall by many thousands of motorists to enjoy the rich coloring of the foliage and the view from the hills.

CATLIN

Clara Catlin was born in Spencerville, Indiana, February 11. 1861, and departed this life September 24, 1936, at the age of 75 years, 7 months and 3 days. She was the daughter of Romeo and Mary Catlin.

Those preceding her in death, were two sisters and one brother, namely Emma Henley, of Lyndhurst, New Jersey, Jennie La Pree of Plattin, Missouri, and Hilard R. Catlin, of Waukegan, Illinois.

Those surviving are two sisters, Mary Mitchell, of Newville, Indiana and Eva Kerr, of Waukegan, together with nieces and nephews.

She made her home with her sister, Eva Kerr at Waukegan, and through her kindness she received the most tender care.

The funeral was held from the Kinsey funeral home, Saturday, afternoon with interment in Spencerville cemetery. J. N. Scholes officiating.

Washington was a big man in many respects, but his name is not at the top of every list. Wisconsin has a football player who wears a No. 14 shoe. In an Eastern city, a gentleman weighing 496 pounds has been taken to court for threatening to "sit upon" a neighbor. Washington did not wear a No. 14 shoe, but he left those "foot prints on the sands of time" that Longfellow wrote about. He did not weigh a quarter of a ton, but he was able to exert pressure where pressure was needed.

Jas. H. Sylvester and his wife, who formerly lived in Spencer township, and now resides at Fort Wayne, were given their liberty Saturday by Sheriff Herbert N. Grimm after charges against them were dismissed in the DeKalb circuit court. The complaint, made by Dade Mitchner, said that after an account of $25 he owed Sylvester for stallion fees had been assigned to the City National bank of Auburn, Mrs. Sylvester collected the amount from him. After nine days in the county jail, the account was settled satisfactorily and Mitchner declined to prosecute further.

With few exceptions the motorists are obeying the yellow line markings on the Indiana state highways to indicate "no-passing zones." The marking progarm, inagurated several weeks ago, is still in progress and will be continued until all hasardous points on the highway system are indicated. The yellow lines, placed parallel with the black stripe, designating the traffic lane for motorists, warn motorists not to attempt passing other vehicles moving in the same direction until they have moved out of the "no-passing zone." The special marking is being used at all curves and grades where motorists have less than thousand feet sight distance ahead.

Central Standard Time has been resumed after several months vacation, but still folks talk about fast time.

At a meeting of the DeKalb County Corn Growers Association held in the County Agent's office Wednesday evening, it was decided to have a County Corn husking contest this Fall. A committee was appointed to find a suitable field to hold the contest in. The date of the contest was temporarily set for October 24. Entries are limited to one man from each township. The Farm Bureau chairman to receive the entry from his township and turn it in to the County Agent.

DAVID HOGG DELIVERED SEVERAL ADDRESSES IN ILLINOIS

Pinch Hits for United States Senator Otis Glenn

(Special to St. Joe News)

Former Congressman David Hogg has returned from Illinois where he was sent by the National Republican Committee to address several mass meetings as a pinch hitter for United States Senator Otis Glenn of Illinois. The more important of these meetings was an audience at the Bond County Fair at Greenville where several thousand were in attendance and an evening mass meeting of two thousand at Springfield, Illinois.

Mr. Hogg on his return said, "Enthusiasm for Republican success in Illinois is in high tide. The most common expression which one hears in discussing the political situation is, 'How can such wasteful extravagance happen here?' Governor Horner, of Illinois, like our own Governor McNutt, of Indiana, has made himself extremely unpopular by a system of taxation which has no defense. Everywhere I heard the prophecy that Illinois will pile up its old time Republican majority."
